Very Short Trip
Baby on the Train

Gen. Dawes Sees Joy

Los Angeles, Cal., March 11—This train will soon be passing Hodge, Cal., where your reporter alights for a moment, to see how the alfalfa crop is coming and how much will probably be lost on every ton produced.

On the 35-mile strip of highway between Victorville and Barstow, many of those that formerly raised alfalfa profitably are now on the dole, which, at the moment, pays better than alfalfa.

After Hodge—a trip of a few hundred miles across the desert and up the Pacific coast to the Hearst ranch. When you have work to do on the train the trip from Miami up to New York, and from New York to the Pacific coast, seems not longer than a few minutes.

Nothing is as interesting as a mother with a baby. There is one on this train, a yellow-haired baby. At every station the mother walks up and down with that weight in her arms. When she comes to a baggage truck she puts him down and lets him pretend to walk back and forth on it. He likes that, and laughs. His name is Ivan Townsend Smith, he has three teeth and is only eight months old.

"No, he has no Russian blood. "I have named him Ivan because it's a romantic and I call him Ivan the Terrible only in fun. See how lovely he is. Have you got any children? How wonderful children are. I was going to bring him in to see you this morning, his hair was so cute after I washed it, but you were busy working."

Ivan's mother almost married Mr. Moore, ambassador to Spain, but he died, and "Ivan the Terrible" is worth ten ambassadors to Spain.

Max Schmeling, German heavyweight prize fighter, beat Mr. Hamas with ease and says, "Now we get Baer." Baer, you know, is the world heavyweight champion. The fact that he is a Jew, and not a blue-eyed Nordic, with the back of his head as straight up and down as a board fence, is said to annoy Mr. Hitler.

It will interest Hitler and others. A hard hitting "Nordic" meets Max Baer, a tall young Jew who laughs while he fights. The meeting will settle nothing. Racial supremacy does not depend on the fist. But in New York city it ought to draw a crowd, gigantic, and a "gate" of about one million dollars.

Jews do well whatever is worth doing, and there is nothing new about Jewish prize fighting champions.

Mendoza, "the Jew," whom you may see fighting without gloves in old British prints, had a habit of knocking men out. Benny Leonard, in his prime, was the best man in the world in his class. And a good many not known as Jews, adopting Irish names for the sake of popularity in the prize ring, were numerous. "Tommy Ryan," with marvelous speed and fighting quality, was a Jew, with a real name quite unlike "Tommy Ryan."

General Dawes, once vice-president, always busy, now visiting General Pershing at Tucson, Arizona, says:

"America is on the verge of real economic recovery. It's natural force, and human nature, are definitely working for recovery, and in May of this year, positively not later than July, the nation will know the depression is over."

Well, it is a pleasure to have somebody at least say so, even though they may have to say it over and over year after year.

When watches were first made, a Frenchman said it was strange that man, with genius and intelligence enough to make a watch, should be superstitious enough to believe in ghosts. It's more strange that the human race, with sufficient intelect and will to fly, travel underneath the ocean, and talk around the world, without wires, should be feeble and foolish enough to believe in a permanent depression. The belief in ghosts is slowly disappearing. Let's hope and believe the depression will disappear more rapidly.

Some seem discouraged about the United States, some not. Alfred I. duPont, who lives part of the time in Jacksonville, Florida, is convinced that the United States will continue as a "going concern." He has just bought in Florida two hundred and forty-two thousand acres of land, in three counties, all on the West coast, where there is plenty of timber.

He also bought a railroad, a telephone and telegraph company, a paper mill that will supply southern newspapers, perhaps others with "newsprint" paper at a reasonable price, from Southern pine trees.

It is pleasant to have one American indicate that he doesn't think the United States has gone to hades.

Utility Holding Firms Must Go---Roosevelt

HOLDING Firms New TARGET

MUST GO, SAYS ROOSEVELT

New York, March 12—Stocks sank to new low levels for the year as the market became aware of the firm stand President Roosevelt had taken on holding company legislation.

By Associated Press

Washington, March 12—President Roosevelt in a special message to Congress called today for regulation of public utility holding companies and struck back at "propaganda" flooding Capitol Hill against the legislation.

"Except where it is absolutely necessary to the continued functioning of a geographically integrated operating utility system," said the President, "the utility holding company with its present powers must go.

"If we could relate our financial history in the light of experience, certainly we would have none of this holding company business.

"It is a device which does not belong to our American traditions of law and business.

Tells of Fraud

"I've watched the use of investors' money to make the investor believe that the efforts of government to protect him are designed to defraud him.

"I have seen much of the propaganda prepared against such legislation—even down to mimeographed sheets of instructions for propaganda to exploit the most far-fetched and fallacious fears.

"I have seen enough to be as unimpressed by it as I was by the similar efforts to stir up the country against the securities exchange bill last spring."

Mr. Roosevelt insisted the legislation "will not destroy legitimate business or wholesome and productive investment.

"I will not destroy a penny of actual value of those operating companies which holding companies now control and which holding company securities represent insofar as they have any value.

Within 5 Years

"The disappearance at the end of five years of those utility holding companies which cannot justify themselves as necessary for the functioning of the operating utility companies of the country is an objective which Congressional leaders I have consulted deem essential to a realistic and far-sighted treatment of the evils of public utility holding companies.

"It is time to make an effort to reverse that process of the concentration of power which has made most American citizens, once traditionally independent owners of their own pany and telegraph company, practically an entire town, and is expected to start a paper mill that will supply southern newspapers, perhaps others with "newsprint" paper at a reasonable price, from Southern pine trees.

businesses, helplessly dependent for their daily bread upon the favor of a very few, who, by devices such as holding companies, have taken for themselves unwarranted economic powers."

Mr. Hearst Interviewed On National Politics And the 1936 Campaign

THREE questions were submitted to William Randolph Hearst by the United Press, asking for Mr. Hearst's opinion on the present political situation and the 1936 Presidential campaign. Following is the text of the questions and Mr. Hearst's replies:

Q—Do the current editorials in Hearst papers mean that you will attack Roosevelt from here on?

A—Our current editorials have been supporting the President very vigorously in his opposition to union wages for the dole.

However, our current editorials merely mean what our editorials have always meant; that we support policies which we believe to be generally beneficial, and oppose policies which we think are harmful and which interfere with the revival of industry and the return of prosperity.

We have not had any editorials attacking President Roosevelt and probably will not have any. We have opposed some of his policies—the NRA for instance.

Q—Whom will you support in the coming campaign?

A—I do not know who will be nominated. I suppose it will be Mr. Roosevelt on the Democratic ticket and possibly Chief Justice Hughes on

LAW LETS WALSH ESCAPE CHAIR

Edmund J. Walsh was found guilty of manslaughter in a directed verdict of the jury in East Cambridge court this afternoon. Judge Nelson P. Brown instructed the jurors. There were no arguments by counsel. Walsh will be sentenced tomorrow.

Edmund J. Walsh, alleged slayer of a Malden policeman, cannot be found guilty of either first or second degree murder.

Judge Nelson P. Brown so ruled today on a point of law raised by defense counsel for the Stoneham man at his trial in superior court at Cambridge.

Judge Brown agreed with Attorney William R. Scharton that the most that Walsh can be found guilty of is manslaughter.

It will be for the jury to say whether or not Walsh is guilty or not guilty of that.

Walsh was on trial for his life for first degree murder, in the shooting of Patrolman Isaiah McLain, oldest member of the Malden police department, on Fellsway East, last November.

Scharton argued that Walsh resisted because McLain did not have a warrant, and did not state why he was making the arrest.

Therefore, he said, Walsh under the law could not be charged with murder when he killed the officer, in resisting.

The defense does not admit that Walsh resisted arrest. It is their contention that the gun went off while Walsh was trying to dispose of it.

McLain went after Walsh when Guy Antico of Malden said he recognized him as a robber.

Judge Brown's ruling follows:

"It is the law that a resisting

JOHNSON Wars on PRIEST

BRANDS LATTER AS "TERMITE"

By International News Service

Washington, March 12—Hugh S. Johnson offered to pledge himself today to "fostering a non-partisan, non-political, nation-wide movement to exterminate the influence of this pair of political termites"—the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, Detroit's radio priest, and Senator Huey Long (D) of Louisiana.

The former recovery administrator made this offer—and one of his intimates says this is his actual intention since he is due to be engaged as a radio broadcaster by a commercial concern—in a prepared statement issued here after he heard the priest's radio reply to Johnson's recent broadcast.

He had described the priest and Long as preaching revolutionary policies.

"Any person who heard both of our speeches knows that he (Coughlin) made not one single major conclusion that was not based on absolute falsehood or distortion of what I said and I will make this clear.

"Not one single aspersion was

SHOPPERS WATCH Holdup Chase

Hundreds of shoppers at Washington street and Hayward place today saw a chase after an attempted holdup at 564 Washington street.

Maurice Weinraub, proprietor of a fur shop on the sixth floor, told police a man appeared in his office and demanded money. Weinraub told the man his money was in another part of the shop. He offered to get $5 but the man fled.

Weinraub chased him but lost him in the crowd.

A Tooth for A Quint

ANNETTE DIONNE

By Associated Press

Callander, Ont., March 12—Annette Dionne, who, with her four sisters was nine months and twelve days old at 4:30 a. m., produced her first tooth today.

The tooth came through her lower gum overnight and was discovered when the nurses at the quintuplets' private hospital made their first inspection of the morning.

Annette, who ranks third in weight of the five girls, is the first to have a tooth.

"The others' teeth will come any time now," said Dr. A. R. Dafoe, the babies' physician. "It is probable Marie will be a little tardy due to her comparatively poor start in life."

There was much excitement in the hospital over the event.

There have been slight signs of teething in the mouths of all the babies for about six weeks, but no teeth pierced the gums until today.

The little ones continue to bite on anything near, including the sides of their tiny beds. They show particular favor to their own toes.

Annette's effort in producing the tooth did not seem to worry her any.

She added two ounces in weight from yesterday and the others also celebrated by registering increases.

Baby Annette has one other distinction, she is the tallest by one-quarter inch.

END Of Fin. Com. FAVORED

GOVERNOR WINS O. K. ON BILL

Judge Jacob J. Kaplan was "fired" today as a member of the Boston Finance Commission by Governor Curley in a reopening of their feud.

The governor's action came just after the legislative committee on cities had voted favorably unanimously on a bill under which the commission would be abolished entirely, as Governor Curley had recommended.

Governor Curley's move to drop Judge Kaplan is based on a charge that Judge Kaplan is holding the finance commission post illegally.

Under the constitution and the statutes, the Governor declared in a letter to E. Mark Sullivan, Kaplan's successor as chairman of the commission, no person may hold more than one office under appointment by the Governor.

3 Appointments

Judge Kaplan, according to Curley, was appointed a special justice of Dorchester court on April 11, 1928; was appointed justice of the peace on September 24, 1931, and was appointed to the finance commission on December 27 — all appointments by Governors.

The Governor's action against Kaplan was learned after the judge had been closeted with Curley at noon. When he emerged, Judge Kaplan was asked if he intended to resign.

"No," he said.

"Are you going to stay on?" he was asked.

"If they let me," he replied.

When the Governor was seen, he had just finished dictating the letter to Chairman Sullivan of the commission.

To Name Two

"I told Judge Kaplan of the bill to abolish the commission entirely," said the Governor. "I thought it might cheer him up."

It is understood that tomorrow the Governor will submit two names to the executive council in nominations for places on the board.

One nomination, it was declared, will be that of Philip A. Chapman, former city purchasing agent and penal institutions commissioner, to take the place of Joseph McKenney, former Boston College football coach who has been made assistant director of physical education in Boston public schools.

The other nomination will be to fill the vacancy caused by Judge Kaplan's ouster.

"My position has not changed," Governor Curley said when asked to comment on the action of the legislative committee on cities in voting in favor of abolishing the Boston Finance Commission.

HARLOW NOW FREE; IS POWELL NEXT?

Not for Year

BOTH CARE FOR EACH OTHER, THEY SAY

Hollywood, March 12—Jean Harlow stepped out of the divorce court where she acted the final scene in a real life drama onto a movie set today to begin portraying the role of a china doll in a new movie with Clark Gable.

In court yesterday the actress told of her own shattered romance with Hal Rosson, her third husband, and after testifying for eight minutes was granted her divorce.

Her voice barely above a whisper, platinum-tressed Jean told Judge Elliott Craig she found it impossible to go on living with the screen cameraman she married in Yuma, Ariz., September 18, 1933.

As Rosson was in Europe recovering from an attack of infantile paralysis, the decree was entered by default. Miss Harlow charged cruelty.

Jean's final decree will not be issued for a year.

Although she would not comment after the trial on the rumor she may marry William Powell, screen portrayer of detective roles, she and Powell have denied any plans to wed.

She says she cares for Powell and he says the same about her.

"I'm busy right now," Miss Harlow said, "and my thoughts are solely in my work."

It will be a year before lovely Jean Harlow's divorce from Hal Rosson, her "third strike" in the game of matrimony, becomes final. But the Hollywood gossips already have Husband Number Four picked out for her. He's William Powell, suave portrayer of high brow detective roles. And Jean will be seeing a lot of Clark Gable, too. He and she are working on a picture, "China Seas."

Mother Sobs Forgiveness

6 Boys in Stake Death Will Not Face Trial

Brockton, March 12—"They are all good boys and meant no harm."

Beside the bier of her 8-year-old son, Eddie, Mrs. Michael Smith again today absolved from blame the six boys whose "game of cannibals" accidentally resulted in Eddie being fatally burned at the stake on Saturday.

In tears, the mother denied reports that she had barred Eddie's companions from the house and from his funeral tomorrow.

She said:

"Those boys were the first to see my little son when he was brought home yesterday and they felt so bad, and cried so much, it broke my heart.

"They will be pallbearers if they wish. They are all good boys and mean no harm. My husband feels as I do."

The requiem mass will be at 9:30 tomorrow at St. Mary's Polish Catholic Church, with burial in Calvary cemetery.

There will be no court action resulting from the tragedy.

District Attorney Edmund R. Dewing made this tentative decision today, although assigning State Detective Lieutenant Albert L. Brouillard to make a final investigation.

NEW DESTROYER

Ready Friday

The first of the new type 1500-ton destroyers constructed at the Charlestown navy yard will be placed in commission at 11 a. m. Friday.

Acting Commandant Captain Harold E. Cook will read the commission orders and the ship, named the McDonough, will be turned over to Commander Charles A. Alden, formerly of R. O. T. C. naval headquarters at Harvard.

Off for Bermuda

With 75 passengers from New England aboard, the liner Lady Hawkins sailed from Commonwealth pier, South Boston, today for a 28-day cruise to Bermuda and the British West Indies.

In spite of the rain, the pier was crowded.

Among Boston passengers were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cabot, Mrs. Frank Ford, Mrs. Irving Walker and Mr. and Mrs. George Wheelwright.

WELFARE COST

Public welfare, relief and soldiers' costs in Massachusetts in January exceeded the amount expended in December by more than a million dollars, State ERA Administrator Arthur G. Rotch said. The amounts were $9,357,201.16 as against $8,319,714.44.

the Republican ticket if he could be induced to run.

He expresses well the American idea of orderly constitutional government.

I suppose the Republicans will nominate a sound and sincere progressive and not an extreme radical.

There is a possibility of the Democratic Party going so far in the direction of destructive radicalism that a Republican moderationist will have an excellent chance of election.

You see, all the people of the country are not on the dole, although some of the radicals at Washington seem to be trying hard to put them there; nor again are all the Democrats of the nation on the public payroll, although Mr. Farley's especial ambition seems to be to land them there.

Most of the people in America are self-supporting and independent and have a pretty sound well-balanced viewpoint.

They realize that it is a thrilling joyride down the radical toboggan, but a long pull back. The vast majority of the voters will want a common sense and constructive candidate to vote for.

Senator Hiram Johnson of California would make a good candidate for the Republican Party, as would Senator Borah of Idaho or Senator Norris of Nebraska.

These men are very able and judicious American citizens, progressives but not extremists.

I might support any one of them, but I will probably support Mr. Roosevelt.

Q—What is your opinion of the current controversy between Huey Long and General Johnson?

A—I am in favor of it.

You remember the story of the man and wife who were watching a long-haired pianist hammer the keys.

"What do you think of his execution?" said the wife.

"I am in favor of it," replied the husband.

Another phase of the story is concerning the man who was asked what he thought of the convictions of two controversialists.

He said: "I am opposed to their combined convictions, but I am in favor of the conviction of each one separately."

However, I apologize if I am reflecting on your candidate.

The Age-old Cry, 'Oh, My Son! My Son!'

ANGELO ANTOINETTI CONSTANTINO ANTOINETTI

It was the groan of Saul, mourning over Abram, tens and tens of weary centuries ago! And anguished fathers have echoed it all down the ages! "Oh, my son! My son!" It's the cry which needs no expression in words now as this father, Constantino Antoinetti of South Boston, bends to kiss the bloodless cheek of his boy, 17-year-old Angelo Antoinetti, awaiting death from a policeman's bullet. 575 Pupils Flee Fire

Led to Safety Through Smoke by Teachers

Providence, March 12—Through smoke-choked corridors and while a fire raged in the basement, 575 school children were led to safety today by their teachers.

The fire in the John C. Howland School in Cole street was started, according to Battalion Fire Chief John T. Early, by a cigarette discarded in a basement storeroom.

J. Harold Williams, Jr., a kindergarten pupil, discovered the smoke.

The boy notified the principal, Miss Mary Williams, who sounded the usual fire drill, but the signal failed to work. Young Williams and several other boys were sent running through the building to notify the teachers, while firemen were called.

As nearly 100 police rushed to the building, the teachers took the situation in hand and marched out the pupils in orderly fashion.

Firemen held the blaze to the basement.

Quick Tax Slip Vote Looms

Senate Victory Expected After House Sweep

By International News Service

Washington, March 12—The Doughton resolution repealing the pink slip publicity provision of the 1934 income tax law probably will be referred today to the Senate finance committee.

Chairman Harrison of the committee said he was willing to report the bill out quickly if he found there would not be too protracted debate on the floor. A recent poll indicated the resolution would be adopted by the Senate by a close vote.

Since other statutes vest President Roosevelt with authority to issue tax publicity regulations at his discretion, if in the public interest, his approval of the measure is expected.

The House, by a vote of 302 to 98, last night adopted the Doughton resolution.

Ninety-two Republicans joined 210 Democrats, including Speaker Byrns, for repeal. Eighty-seven Democrats, 5 Progressives, 3 Farmer-Laborites and 3 Republicans voted No.

FIREBUG Hunt Ordered BY McSWEENEY

Belief that an arson ring has established headquarters in the city grew today after the seventh incendiary fire in as many days.

Police Commissioner Eugene M. McSweeney ordered a thorough investigation by the headquarters arson squad, headed by Special Officer Albert Caulfield.

Today's fire was in a building on Tremont street, South End. Three of the others were in Charlestown and the remainder in Roxbury.

Oily rags found in the Tremont street building, a wooden three-story dwelling and business structure, burning at four different parts of the first floor, were proof of incendiarism, police said. Similar rags were found at the scenes of the other fires.

So suddenly did the flames leap up through the building that a family living on the third floor barely made its escape to the street, assisted by firemen and police.

Damage was limited to $2500, although it was at first feared that the entire structure might be doomed.

The oily rags were found, police said, in a part of the building which was closed at the time.

Discover New Land

Oslo, March 12 (INS)—A lone Norwegian trawler, sailing in waters just recently evacuated by two large American expeditions, has discovered a new land in the Antarctic and hoisted upon it the flag of Norway, the government was advised today.

Boy Shooting Is Probed

McSweeney Gets Report From All Police

Police Commissioner McSweeney today called for written reports from all officers on the scene early this morning, when Angelo Antainetti, 17, was seriously wounded by a police bullet during an alleged burglary in South Boston.

The boy, one of 10 children of a West Sixth street family, is in a serious condition in city hospital with a bullet in one lung.

Reports by Patrolmen Timothy Wallace and Richard Maher, and Sergeants Mulligan and Mortimer O'Connor were sent to the commissioner by Deputy Superintendent McDevitt.

Wallace is supposed to have fired the bullet that struck Antainetti, erstwhile "boy singer" in night clubs.

All reports stated the shot was fired after Antoietti and Joseph Merrick, 16, of C street, had committed a felony. The commissioner had no comment except to cite the authority of police to fire in case of a felony.

Merrick was said by police to have admitted he and Antoinetti went into a vacant house in B street to steal lead pipe in order to realize money for the movies and roller skating.

Constantine Antoinetti, father of the wounded boy, said his told him he heard a policeman order him to "come here" and that he ran.

WOMAN Refuses to Quit ERA POST

Portland, Me., March 12—Mrs. Alta R. Mitchell, local director of women in ERA projects, was discharged today—but refused to quit.

Her release was ordered by Leroy Smith, an ERA investigator of Augusta.

Smith claimed that last night he found Mrs. Mitchell at campaign headquarters of Llewellyn Carleton, returned early today as victor in a nine-man fight for the Portland city council.

According to Smith, the women's director was actively engaged on the telephone in soliciting votes for Carleton, a violation of ERA rules. Mrs. Mitchell asserted that she will continue to occupy her office in City Hall.

4 ROSS FOES Sign Ouster Plea

Four Quincy residents, admittedly workers for Thomas J. McGrath, defeated mayoralty candidate, testified today in Superior Court that they signed the ouster petition against Mayor Charles A. Ross.

Frank W. Kaulbech of Bayside road, Squanum, testified Attorney Ross, Squantum, testified Attorney counsel, and a Mr. Wight, McGrath campaign treasurer, asked him to sign.

Similar testimony was given by Herbert S. Fairclough of Alkian road, Jacob M. Cohen of Hough's Neck and Charles H. Day of Virginia road, admitted they were workers for McGrath.

STUDENTS FIGHT Reds in Chicago

Chicago, March 12 (INS)—Aroused by the spread of Communistic doctrines in schools and colleges, a group of students notified Mayor Edward J. Kelly they had organized the University Civic League to lead a counter-offensive in favor of Americanism and American doctrines.

Miss Margaret Tillinghast, a freshman at the University of Chicago, spoke for the co-eds in the Chicago district.

MUCH COLDER Weatherman Says

It was 26 below zero today in White River, Ont., and the cold wave up there is headed for Boston.

Rain and much colder is predicted for Boston late today and then, when the rain stops tonight, it will get still colder, according to official predictions.

A drop in temperature from 33 at 8 a. m. to 49 at 10 a. m. was seen as the forerunner of the cold spell.

INSIST ON REPEAL OF 'PINK SLIP' LAW

Communicate with Your Senator and File Protest with Your Tax Return

If you pay Federal income tax you can do two things to protect yourself and your family from snoopers or criminals who are now permitted by law to learn the exact amount of your income.

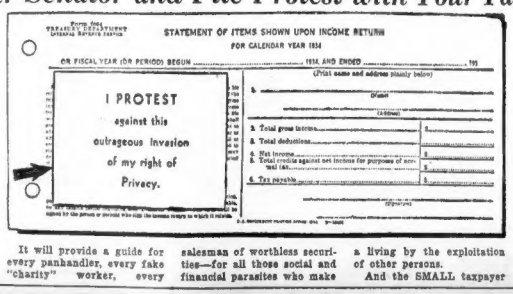
You can, first, write or telegraph your Senator and demand the repeal of the "pink slip" provision of the tax law, which makes your income public.

You can, second, write to The Sentinels of the Republic, Land Title Building, Philadelphia, for the "protest" stickers which they are circulating. Then you can attach one of those stickers to your pink slip, as shown here, and distribute the others to your friends.

You are advised to do both of these things without delay.

March 15, when you must file your income tax return, is almost here.

After March 15, if the law still stands, the Government will be furnishing a card index to every would-be kidnaper, blackmailer and swindler in the country.



It will provide a guide for every panhandler, every fake "charity" worker, every salesman of worthless securities—for all those social and financial parasites who make a living by the exploitation of other persons.

And the SMALL taxpayer will be as exposed to annoyance as the larger.

Though he may not become a target for organized gangdom, he will be subject to petty prying, and also to petty racketeering which can levy its tribute from him as surely as "big time" racketeering takes its toll from bigger business.

Unless you want your personal affairs made public property and yourself an easy mark for extortionists or other crooks you will let your Government know where you stand on this outrageous invasion of your privacy, and let it know NOW.

THE QUESTION:

WILL BRUNO TALK?

'FEARS NOTHING,' HIS ANSWER

"Jimmy" Kilgallen, reporter at the Lindbergh kidnap trial, continues his description of his exclusive interview with Bruno Richard Hauptmann. After answering questions most often asked by the general public, Kilgallen proceeds to provide new light on the case.

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
International News Service Staff Correspondent.
(Copyright, 1935, by International News Service)

New York, March 12—Bruno Richard Hauptmann does not fear for himself the prospect of dying in the electric chair. His concern is for his wife, his child and his mother.

The condemned man told me this in the most comprehensive interview he has granted since his arrest last September.

Hauptmann was leaning against the bars of his cell as he talked. His demeanor was calm, almost detached. We talked about a lot of things before I brought the subject around to the electric chair.

As tactfully as possible I asked him how he felt about the prospects of dying in the electric chair. His voice was low as he replied:

"You can imagine how I feel. For myself, I have no fear. I feel only for my wife and my child and my old mother in Germany. My conscience is clear. If I have to die, I will die like a man. Certainly."

Of his own volition he added:

"The thing that is holding me up now is my wife and my child and the knowledge that I am innocent."

I stood there in the corridor outside his cell trying to figure out this strange man. I had heard Wilentz characterize him as an arch liar. Was he lying to me?

If he was, he was doing a smooth job of it and has a lot of actor in his makeup. There certainly was sincerity in his voice and manner and he looked me in the eye when he said it.

Somehow, I cannot imagine Hauptmann quaking as he walks "the last mile." He just doesn't seem to be the type. Think of his remarkable coolness on the witness stand. Both in the Bronx during his extradition hearing and at his trial in Flemington for murder. The most vicious questions failed to break his nerve.

I have seen them executed. I saw Ruth Snyder and Judd Gray electrocuted at Sing Sing. Ruth "broke." Judd didn't. I saw "Iron Irene Schroeder and Glenn Dague "burn" at Bellefonte, Pa., and both sat in that deadly contraption known as "the chair" without flinching. I covered the hanging of Gerald Chapman at Hartford, Ct., and he took it coolly. I cannot imagine Hauptmann, a man who faced death as a machine gunner in the Kaiser's army, losing his nerve at the last minute.

"Did Hauptmann actually kidnap the Lindbergh baby?"

This is a question that has a double viewpoint and which to this day provokes sharp difference of opinion wherever it is debated. I don't know, of course.

I do know he was convicted on circumstantial evidence on this point, at least. Nobody testified they saw him enter the baby's nursery and abduct the child. When Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was quoted recently as saying Hauptmann was convicted on circumstantial evidence and that she was "a little perturbed" over the verdict, she reflected the views of a number of other persons.

It was Hauptmann's contention, supported by defense witnesses, including his wife, Anna, that he was in the Bronx, New York City, on the night of March 1, 1932—the night the baby was kidnaped from his home in Hopewell, N. J.

Early that fateful evening, Hauptmann insists, he called for his wife at the bakery-restaurant of the Fredericksens, where she was employed as a waitress. Then, he further stated, he and his wife went to their home in the Bronx where they remained the rest of the night.

On this mooted point—where Hauptmann was that night—you can believe one of two things. Either you believe the sworn testimony of prosecution witnesses that they saw Hauptmann in a car containing a ladder in New Jersey shortly before the crime was committed, or you believe the stories of defense witnesses, including Hauptmann himself, that he was in New York City the night the baby was kidnaped.

"Did Hauptmann do the job alone?"

The state says "Yes"; the defense insists a number of persons participated in the crime.

During the trial the defense sought to show, inferentially at least, that the kidnaping was an "inside job" and that servants in the Lindbergh households knew something about it. This contention was vigorously denied by state witnesses and Colonel Lindbergh himself made it apparent he placed no credence whatever in such intimations. Intimation that "a gang" perpetrated the crime was also scoffed at by the prosecution.

"Is there any chance Hauptmann will make a confession?"

Hauptmann himself told me the answer to this one. He said "No."

"I have nothing to confess," said Hauptmann. "If I had a confession to make, I would have done so five months ago and would have saved my wife and my child and my mother all the misery they have gone through.

"I am innocent. If they were to come into this cell and say to me: 'Confess and you can walk out free' I could not tell them the story of this kidnaping because I do not know anything about it. I was not there when the baby was kidnaped. I told the whole truth on the stand. I am not covering up anybody. I have nothing to cover up. I have told all I know."

Hauptmann, now "Convict 17,400" in the New Jersey state prison, awaiting execution of the death sentence occupies "Cell 9" in the death house. He wears a convict's uniform—blue breeches, blue shirt and shoes. His head is shaved. Other prisoners are making him as uncomfortable as they can, but he is receiving all the attention from prison authorities that deathhouse prisoners usually get. He has the same food as the prison guards, all the smokes he wants and reading matter.

BRAVE SMILE WINS LOVE OF WORLD FOR ALYCE

Convalescence Begins for Alyce; Girl Bows to Her 'First Love'

(Pictures by Boston Evening American Staff Photographers)

And this is the real smile, the brave smile which won a world's love and respect for little Alyce Jane McHenry of the "upside down stomach." The envelope, intended for Alyce Jane, no, no need for a name. It would have been delivered promptly, even without the hospital address.

$200,000 Willed Alyce's SURGEON

Taunton, March 12—Dr. Philemon E. Truesdale, surgeon in the Alyce Jane McHenry operation in Fall River, was enriched $200,000 today by allowance of a will in probate court here.

It was the will of Miss Mary A. Case, 90, of Swansea, which also included a $2500 trust fund for a pet parrot that reverted to a charity because the parrot died.

Miss Case, a second cousin of former Governor Norman S. Case of Rhode Island, died last month. The will left Governor Case $15,000 outright and a trust fund of $75,000 for himself and his family.

Explaining the gift to Dr. Truesdale, the will noted:

"We have been friends for 20 years. I feel that I owe him a large debt of gratitude for his unending kindness and comfort through years of invalidism."

The value of the estate was estimated at $1,500,000.

NORMA COUNSEL In Assets Suit

Judge Frederick J. Dillon of Suffolk probate court today had under advisement a petition which would have the court order Attorney George A. Douglass, Norma Millen's counsel, turn over $10,000 in assets to the new guardian of Henry H. Nelson, now confined to the Grafton State Hospital for the Insane. Douglass formerly represented Nelson.

SIGNS OF CURE WITH LETTERS OF BOY, 8

By PEGGY DOYLE

Fall River, March 12—Today, for the first time, an official bulletin from Truesdale Hospital regarding the condition of Alyce Jane McHenry contained the word "convalescence."

Apparently her doctors are convinced at last that full recovery is only a matter of time. The bulletin said:

"Temperature 99.2; pulse 96; respiration 20. Slept well during the night. Taking adequate fluid and nourishment. Convalescence progressing satisfactorily."

Drs. George King and Leonard W. Hill affixed their signatures.

The many stitches necessary following the upside-down stomach operation probably will not be removed until next Monday, it was decided.

...rays may be taken tomorrow to see how Alyce Jane's insides have adjusted themselves in their strange but normal places and to study the collapsed left lung which later, when the child is much stronger, the doctors may try to expand.

A Boy Friend!

Hospital nurses recognize other signs than temperature and pulse as indicating the progress of a patient and in Alyce Jane's case they have found one sign pointing to a "sure cure." Alyce Jane—of all things!—has a boy friend.

His name is Johnny. His picture is kept on a table in Alyce's room. He writes her a letter every day, and she reads every one of them.

Thus came the necessary little touch of romance to brighten the days of convalescence for the little girl from Omaha, Neb., who went down into the valley of shadows smiling and came back the same way.

Johnny has the corner on some of the other young hearts who beat a little faster after seeing Alyce's picture and following her big adventure every day in the newspapers. He lives just half a mile from the hospital.

Age No Difference

There is a little hitch in the matter of age. Johnny is only eight years old, and of course Alyce is 10. But so far that hasn't made any difference. Fact is, Alyce said:

"The first person I want to see when you'll let me see people is Johnny."

When she said this, Alyce was fondling a little black toy dog with a green bow tied around his neck.

'Please Excuse My Back'

There's really no need of an apology for Phyllis Marion's back. Judges of New York's most recent International Beauty Convention pronounce it perfect.

Bruno's Wife To Tour West

Hopes to Add to Fund for Killer's Defense

By International News Service

Trenton, N. J., March 12—Mrs. Bruno Richard Hauptmann will leave soon on a tour of the Middle West in an effort to raise funds to add to the rapidly growing defense fund for her husband, convicted of the murder of the kidnaped Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

The trip will include stops at all of the principal cities, concentrating on those with large German-American populations.

The move by Mrs. Hauptmann comes shortly after the city of New York put a stop to "Hauptmann defense fund" rallies on the ground that such meetings may not be held without being licensed.

Whether or not the instigators of the defense fund meetings applied for such a license has not been revealed.

While Mrs. Hauptmann made plans for obtaining additional funds to finance the appeal fight, attorneys for Hauptmann went forward with the legal end of the battle.

After conferring with Attorney General David T. Wilentz for an hour yesterday, Frederick A. Pope, of defense counsel, announced the State of New Jersey would supply the trial record free of cost, but that the rest of the appeal costs would be borne by the defense.

COUGHLIN LINKS JOHNSON TO BARUCH IN FIERY TALK

DENIES HE IS LONG'S ALLY IN FIGHT

By International News Service

Detroit, March 12—Declaring that the effects of the New Deal are directly attributed to Bernard M. Baruch and his Wall Street associates, the Rev. Fr. Charles E. Coughlin lashed back at Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, last night.

He characterized Johnson as Baruch's puppet, who "strutted upon the stage of this depression like a comic opera cream puff general." He spoke for 45 minutes.

Father Coughlin referred sarcastically to Johnson's "underslung vocabulary" and asserted the former NRA chief "never faced an enemy nor successfully faced an issue." The highlights of his speech were:

1. Denial of charges that he and Huey P. Long formed a political alliance, though Long's name was not mentioned.

2. Defended his citizenship.

3. Charged that Baruch was Johnson's "Lord and master."

4. Declared he knew Johnson's attack on him was the beginning of a campaign to silence his voice in public affairs.

5. Answered the charge that he was a revolutionary by a declaration that "so were Washington and Jefferson in 1776."

6. Referred to Johnson as "a red herring, but a dead one," "a cracked gramaphone," "the New Deal's greatest casualty," "a chocolate soldier" and "a political corpse whose ghost had returned to haunt."

Roosevelt or Ruin

In defense of his citizenship Father Coughlin said:

"My dear General, I am as much, if not more of an American as you are or ever will be. Your parents are but one generation removed fro mIreland. My paternal grandfather's bones are buried in Lackawanna, N. Y. My great-grandfather dulled many a pick with the pioneers who dug the Erie Canal."

The radio priest reiterated his faith in President Roosevelt in the following language:

"My friends, I still proclaim to you it is either Roosevelt or ruin. I support him today and will support him tomorrow because we are neither going back to the individualism of the past nor are we going forward to the Communism of the future."

At another point he referred to Roosevelt as "our beloved leader."

Answering Johnson's charge that he and Huey Long had formed an active political alliance, Father Coughlin said:

"My record is clear in that neither you nor Bernard Mamasses Baruch can justify any statement to the effect that the National Union for Social Justice or that I, its president, are allied with Republican or Democrat, with Catholic or Protestant, or with any other individual or group of individuals.

"You have cleverly insinuated that I was a modern Talleyrand, who, as a Catholic cleric, was excommunicated by his church, because he protected the plundering Bourbons.

His Right to Talk

"This you did in one breath, while in the next you praised the good Catholic laity.

"For what purpose? For none other than to turn, not the Protestants nor the Jews against me, but rather to confuse the people of my own faith."

In regard to Johnson's statement that "Judas Iscariot was a piker compared to Father Coughlin," the priest said:

"What insanity possessed you to say such things, what desperation forced you to utter such exaggerations, I am content to leave to the justice of history and to the judgment of God this decision."

Declaring he was addressing Johnson "as American to American," he defended his right to participate in the affairs and activities of citizenship. Then he said:

"The money changers whom the Priest of Priests drove from the temple of Jerusalem, both by word and by physical force, have marshaled their forces behind the leadership of a chocolate soldier for the purpose of driving the priest out of public affairs.

"I am characterized as a revolutionary for raising my voice against palpable injustices while the blind Bourbons cannot see the writing on the wall nor read the pages of history written by crimson pens dipped into the bleeding hearts at Concord, Lexington and Valley Forge.

"In 1776 Washington and Jefferson and their compatriots had buried at them the vile epithet of revolutionary."

Again he said:

Doctrines Vital

"My dear general, I am not important, nor are you. But the doctrines which I preach are important.

"While you were content to vomit your venom upon my person and against my character the American public is fully cognizant that not once did you dare attack the truth which I teach."

At another time he said General Johnson was "a cracked gramaphone squawking the message of his master's voice." Again he called him a "prince of bombast." Later he spoke of "the chiselers of Johnson and Baruch."

"Your task master," he said, can profit by his gold and silver transactions, but it was unethical when the Radio League of the Little Flower gained $12,000 in silver.

"But not one ounce of silver did I ever purchase for myself. Not one penny of gain from silver have I ever made for myself—and I am the Judas Iscariot."

The priest wanted to know where Johnson was in 1930, 1931 and 1932.

"Where were you then?" he asked, "while we were advocating a new deal on Sundays and feeding thousands in the breadlines on Mondays, made necessary by the cold-blooded individualism of an ancient economic system to which you belong?

"Where Were You?"

"Where were you in 1933 and 1934, when our beloved leader, consecrated to drive the money changers out of the temple, was hampered and impeded by your master, Bernard Baruch, the acting President of the United States, the uncrowned prince of Wall Street?"

In conclusion, Father Coughlin said:

"As long as I live, I will dedicate myself to assist in driving the money changers out of the temple."

Following the address, he chatted with Frank Murphy, Governor-General of the Philippines, who had come to the station to listen to the address.

Priest Called "Termite"

made that did not equally rest on falsehood."

Johnson said as a "cracker-downer" Father Coughlin has me backed off the board," and continued.

"Political Enemies"

"After hearing his pious flubdub and examining the most recently modified insanities of the Louisiana Kingfish, I am more than ever convinced that this pair of mule sirens rank as public political enemies 1 and 2.

"There's less actional harm in the 100 worst gunmen than there is in these two political racketeers."

Johnson described as "the worst and most deceitful part" of the priest's speech his attempt to say that his speech was an attack on the Catholic church.

"High dignitaries of that church knew about that speech beforehand and they and many others who knew about it since have warmly approved it," the general stated.

He said he has received thousands of letters since his radio attack on the priest and the senator from scores of every creed and political faith.

"If they are an index," Johnson continued, "there is a mighty bulwark of sane, sensible American opinion with me in believing that the gospel preached by these economic shysters is a gospel that leads away from recovery and progress to disorder and anarchy—that their rosepainted plans, if tried, would make even the poorest citizen worse off, rather than better, and beggars of us all."

He dismissed the attacks made upon him that he is "a tool of bankers and big business" by saying the way he "batted those babies" around in NRA he is "less popular with them than smallpox."

Johnson served notice on Father Coughlin that he intends to answer him on "three important particulars. First, his absolute distortion or falsification of my simple statements; second, his falsification of facts in general, and third his falsifications of my record and other circumstances."

The general was smarting at the terms "Chocolate soldier" and "political corpse" applied to him by the Detroit priest.

In General Johnson's decision to reply, official Washington was frankly worried. None of those close to the New Deal enjoys this spot-lighting of its troubles, and matters, it was said, appeared to be getting worse if the debate drags on.

Father Coughlin opened his address by standing on his right, "as an American citizen, privileged as such to speak to American citizens."

Bernard Baruch, the Detroit radio priest said, was General Johnson's "prince of high finance."

Father Coughlin said that he was still a supporter of President Roosevelt, but he said that Baruch had prevented the President from rescuing a nation "bound to a rock of depression by chains of economic slavery."

The charge, that he was a tool of Baruch and of Wall Street, brought from General Johnson:

"Of course I expected all the lying bunk about my being the tool of banker's and Big Business."

Wife, Miles Away, Awakes As Train Kills Husband

Wheels of a freight train ground to a sudden stop in Roxbury today.

In East Foxboro—22 miles away—an elderly woman walked sleeplessly through her house.

Hours later, a grim liaison drew the two together in a strange story of death and a woman's intuition.

George Parker, 58, a railroad employe for 31 years, was crushed to death under the freight.

His wife, for the first time in the 21 years of her husband's hazardous job, awoke with a start.

At was 5 o'clock in the morning. A feeling that something had happened to her husband could not be downed.

At exactly the same hour, Parker was still alive. Both legs were severed, save for a mere thread.

The veteran trainman directed his own rescue. A brother trainman handed him a cigarette. Pinned under the wheels at the Forsyth street yards of the New Haven road, Parker told his fellows:

"I fell under before I could catch myself."

Heavy jacks lifted the car from Parker's severed legs and he was rushed to City Hospital. At 8 o'clock he died.

Police Chief Joseph Dean of Foxboro undertook to tell the new widow of the tragedy. Mrs. Parker met him at the door:

"I know it. Something has happened. I woke up at 5 o'clock and simply couldn't sleep," she sobbed before the chief even spoke.

Parker was a flagman on a milk train that left Lowell at 2:15. He was filling the fifth car for the shifting process when his car swung alongside a loading platform.

In a flash he was drawn under.

The engineer of the train was Thomas Riley. Ray Smith of Charlestown was fireman and Raymond Titus of Milton street, Dorchester, was conductor in charge of the train.

V-8 POWER

With the introduction of the V-8 engine, Ford brought a new standard of performance to the low-priced field.

COMFORT ZONE RIDING

Gives the ease, smoothness and comfort of a "front seat ride" even to passengers in the back seat—an important engineering advance.

FORD ECONOMY

This new V-8 is the most economical car to operate Ford has ever built.

YOU have heard a lot about the new Comfort Zone Ride of the Ford V-8 for 1935. Its reception has already shown it to be an improvement that automobile-driving America needed.

But, you get a lot more than riding comfort with the new Ford V-8. This car was conceived to meet every motoring requirement.

The V-8 engine—proved in use by more than a million motorists—gives you the power and performance necessary to satisfy the first of these. This means more than high speed. It means reserves of power to improve and ease every-day driving. And it means the utmost in operating and upkeep economy.

You may want roominess. The new Ford V-8 meets this requirement. It is wide, long—with plenty of space for luggage behind the rear seat.

You may want style. Here is streamlined beauty in the finest sense of the term—and the interior upholstery, decorations and appointments that are little short of luxurious.

The new Ford V-8 brings you improvements that make driving a new pleasure—a clutch that enables you to start or shift gears almost without effort—brakes that respond to a light touch of the pedal. You also get safety glass all around at no extra cost.

Name what you'd want if price were no consideration. Then see the new Ford V-8. You'll agree it gives you everything—as it was built to do!

This Is Life
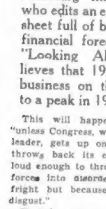
ROBERT E. ROGERS

Mr. Alvan T. Simonds, Fitchburg manufacturer, who edits an exciting little sheet full of business and financial forecasts called "Looking Ahead," believes that 1935 will see business on the upgrade to a peak in 1936.

This will happen, he believes, "unless Congress, with a vociferous leader, gets up on its hind legs, throws back its ears, and brays loud enough to throw the recovery forces into disorder, not through fright but because of paralyzing disgust."



Robert E. Rogers

That in passing. I leave recovery to the economic experts. What interested me—fascinated me, rather—is the editor's reprint of a bill introduced into the House of Representatives at Washington a couple of months ago. It is H. R. 3415, January 9, 1935, and it makes the old elementary theory that wealth should be conscripted in time of war, as well as man power, sound like a comic limerick. It is worth quoting in its most important spots. It provides:—

"That the Collector of Internal Revenue for the United States is hereby required to certify to the Secretary of War annually a list of the individuals in the United States, setting forth the amount of income said individuals have reported annually.

Richest First

"The Secretary of War shall be required to select from such lists the names of individuals who shall serve at the point of hostilities in time of war. Names on such lists shall be arranged in chronological (sic) order; that is, the individual with the highest income shall be number one on said list and it shall be arranged in descending order. Individuals with the highest income must be sent to the point of hostilities before any other individuals are called for service.

"Neither the Secretary of War nor any other administrative officer, nor anyone except Congress, shall make any exemptions limiting the application of this act because of age, infirmity, or any other reason except income. All service must be at the point of hostilities and must be 'active service in actual conflict.

"Until the certified income list be exhausted no other persons shall be certified or drafted for Army service.

"This act shall be administered by the disciplinary units of the United States Army and the United States Department of Justice. A Board of Appeal, composed of non-income-taxpaying individuals shall hear all cases of controversary, arising under 'the act.'

Who's the Author?

A certain amateurishness in phrasing would lead one to believe that the above was not drawn up by an experienced lawyer or politician. But as a document in itself I think it is a wow!

It may, of course, be any one of three things. First, the work of a genuine fanatic, a Browning idealist, whose reach must exceed his grasp, one to whom nothing is impossible, not even the original Townsend plan.

Or it may be the work of a thoughtful artist working in satire who believes that our American tradition of exaggeration is the best way to bring home to the public mind his dogma that war is purely a capitalist phenomenon.

Or it may even be the work of a still more thoughtful person, who is posing temporarily as a nut to remind us of the imbecility of a great deal of our current legislation—and not merely the imbecility, but the tyranny, the injustice, and the murderous hatred with which even honest and useful aggregations of capital are being regarded today by ignoramuses under the spell of demagogues and political and economic Holy Rollers.

A Joke?

Of course, it may be just a joke. If so, it's a bad joke, a joke which comes too close to home to provoke anything but a sour and boding laugh. Is it after all any more ridiculous and insane than a lot of the stuff which is being said publicly today by supposedly responsible clergymen, educators, sociologists, and liberals?

If you believe in Nietzsche's "eternal recurrence" turn back in your American history to the days of the Populists. Things will sound pretty familiar.

TOUGH LUCK, MAE
U. S. WANTS A CHANGE

SKIN AND BONES REVOLT ON

New York, March 12—International beauty shop owners described "Miss 1936" today as being a morsel of 100 pounds, five feet one inch tall, and with a waist of 23 inches.

This is three and one half inches smaller than the waist of "Miss 1935." If possible, the current miss will also be a "natural," not a platinum blonde.

Here are some figures put out by the beauty people:

	Miss 1934	Miss 1935	Miss 1936
Weight	115 pounds	134 pounds	100 pounds
Height	5 ft. 5in.	5 ft. 7-9 in.	5 ft. 1 in.
Bust	33 in.	35 in.	30 in.
Hips	36 in.	35½ in.	33 in.
Waist	26 in.	26½ in.	23 in.

The beauty shop folk in convention here were told that "violently rouged" fingernails and toenails are passe, and that naturally grey hair is far more distinguished than the dyed variety.

After all, you have to expect these things, and you know the fickleness of dat old debbil public fancy.

And at least nobody can say you didn't panic 'em for a couple of years, Mae. Why, the crop of American curves was something terrific after the girls got a load of you in "Diamond Lil."

But everybody wants a change. You know that, Mae.

And don't you take it as any reflection on you personally that 35,000 beauty shop owners all over the country have decided that the great American figure for 1936 is to be nothing but skin and bones.

It looks pretty much like a nation-wide revolt, Mae, because the composite picture of "Miss Ideal America of 1936," announced today at the opening of the International Beauty Shop Owners' convention, doesn't look much like you.

Just 100 Pounds

Miss Ideal America of 1936 weighs just 100 pounds, Mae, instead of 134. Her height is 5 feet 1 inch. Her hips have come down from 35½ inches to 33. And her waist is just 23 inches instead of 26½.

But the worst of it is, she's gotta have dignity. She's gotta have "lady-like charm." None of that rough stuff.

You'll never catch her saying "whyncha c'mup an' see me sometime?"

You and I know she wouldn't know how to say it if she wanted to, the big sissy.

Well, I'm sorry to give you bad news, Mae, old pal, but I guess that's life. Pardon me while I get a grapefruit.

Yours,
Dorothy Roe

SHEARER,
Big-Navy Man,
CRIES 'PERJURY'

By Associated Press

Washington, March 12—William B. Shearer, big navy advocate, laid before the Senate munitions committee today a statement briefing with charges of perjury against others who had at various times testified against him.

Once in the employ of big shipyards as their agent at the Geneva naval limitation conference, Shearer declared "political pressure" had been employed to "hurt the morale" of the navy and that shipbuilders in turn had been directed to have him "walk the plank."

Called to the stand at his own request to answer charges he had threatened death and scandal to shipbuilding company officials, he launched first into his attack.

He said:

"The ship builders informed me that the then secretary of state (Frank B.) Kellogg protested my employment because I exposed the legal adviser to the American delegation at Geneva for trickery against the best interests of his own country.

"Owing to a law suit that this government has against Mr. Schwab, Mr. Schwab, through Eugene Grace (president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation) passed the word to have me walk the plank."

Lauds Movies' Aid

New York, March 12 (INS)—Professor Raymond Moley of President Roosevelt's so-called brain trust, asserted at a luncheon in the Motion Picture [illegible] tion pictures prevent and discourage crime rather than foster it.

'WAR DECLARED'

JIM, 'OLD AT 23,' JOINS AIR FORCE WITH DESIRE TO KILL

April 6th, 1917. The United States declared war.

Since 1914 I had read with greedy interest every newspaper article, magazine story or bit of flimsy fiction which described the flight, battles or accomplishments of Allied aviators. The photograph of an airplane fascinated me; the drawing of an air battle hypnotized me.

Now one and only one thought raced through my mind. We are at war!—now I can fly! The idea obsessed me. It tired me. In a burning circle it chased around my brain until I felt on fire.

April 7th. This is my birthday. I am 23 today.

At dinner that night I did very little. No one noticed. The conversation was tense with every sentence pertaining to America's entrance into the war. When the dessert was served a cake with twenty-three red candles gleamed before me. The word JIM, outlined in uneven letters made of red seed candles, seemed to jump all over the cake. I remember I simply stared, thinking, "I am 23—pretty old now—23, but I'm going to war—to fight in the air."

"Jim, what is the matter?" My mother was speaking.

"Come, come—cut the cake," interrupted my father.

"Blow the candles, Jim—blow the candles first," shouted my sister, "and make a wish—don't forget to make a wish."

I made a wish, the greatest wish of my life. I blew the candles and cut the cake.

"Tell me what you wished," begged my sister. "Please, Jim, tell me—"

"What did you wish, son?" asked my mother.

"That I would get my share of Germans!"

Going to Fight

An ominous silence. Would no one ever speak? Seconds passed. I busied myself with the cake, but could hardly swallow. My father and mother were intent on their pieces, but my sister's eyes never left my face. Finally she opened the way.

"I know what you're going to do, Jim!— Fly!— You're going to fly—aren't you?"

"Yes! I'm going to join the Air Service."

"I knew it! I knew it! Oh, Jim."

Again the dreadful silence. Annoyed that neither of my parents asked a question, volunteered a remark or even seemed interested I continued in a hurt tone, "I'm going to fly!"

Not a word.

"I'm going to fight in the air—"

"I'm going to start tomorrow."

And that was the end of my birthday party.

Officers were stationed at Fort Lawton on the outskirts of Seattle, and the next morning I was on my way. Arriving, I inquired about enlisting in the Air Service.

"I know nothing about it," a captain told me, "but if you go to the recruiting station they will probably have the information."

I wandered through the grounds at the Fort. It was a beautiful spring day and the trees swayed in a gentle breeze that drifted over the jagged cliffs of Puget Sound. I sat down in the shade. The water glistened a bright, bright blue, and the whitest clouds were drifting across the sun. There I sat staring into the sky, and dreamed of flying through just such clouds.

A few hours later I was telling the recruiting officers of my desire. Eagerly I waited their answers.

"Well!" drawled one, "I don't think there is an Air Service."

"If there is," chimed in another, "I don't know how you would join it."

They advised me to write to Washington and apply for enlistment. I was discouraged, but posted a letter that night to Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, applying for enrollment in the air service.

Two weeks of impatient waiting passed before the reply came. My application did not comply with army regulations; it was necessary to fill out the enclosed form and with three letters of recommendation return it. No time was lost.

Fills Blank

Before the day was over I possessed the missives endorsing my character and moral fitness. In highest spirits I filled in the application blank and, with the precious letters, mailed it.

Three weeks passed. Each day seemed a year. Then the postman handed me a letter.

"I sure hope this is what you've been expecting."

"It is, thanks!" And I ran into the house—up two flights of stairs—shut and locked my door and, panting, tore open the envelope. The latter said that before enlisting in the aviation section it would be necessary to report to San Diego, California, for a physical examination.

A few days later I was on a steamer bound for San Diego.

Arriving, I boarded a launch for a flying base at North Island. Filled with the mystery of army routine I sat down beside a sophisticated soldier.

His willingness to talk and answer questions clarified many details. Asking where to go, whom to see and, most of all, how to conduct myself properly in the presence of officers, made the trip across the bay seem short. Soon we were walking towards the headquarters building.

The sun was blazing. The day was hot. Planes were flying. They passed within forty or fifty feet overhead and the sound of humming motors filled the air. With highest hopes I entered the building and my companion pointed to an officer.

He read my letter from the War Department, asked numerous questions, then directed me to a medical officer. Five minutes later, stripped naked, I stood, with three other applicants, before an army doctor and two assistants.

Hearts and lungs were tested, teeth, throats examined, exact measurements and weights taken. Feet were all-important.

Never had I imagined that feet, mere feet, could be so so thoroughly inspected or discussed. It seemed stupid that feet, flat or otherwise, should or could play such a stellar role in the flying ability or instincts of an aviator.

"What have flat feet got to do with flying?"

An assistant, surprised at my stupidity, stared but did not answer, and the great interest in feet continued. After several minutes, I boldly repeated the question. The assistant glared at me.

"You evidently do not understand."

His tone was technically supercilious.

Seated in a revolving chair with instructions to hold tight, I was spun round and round at a terrific gait. Suddenly the two assistants caught the chair and the doctor held a pencil sharply pointed before my eyes.

"Follow the point of the pencil," he instructed.

Dizzy, Groggy

Slowly he moved it back and forth, up and down, and, repeating the movements faster—faster — faster, intently watched my eyes.

Dizzy, groggy and half-sick with disappointment, I imagined failure. This was a mistake.

One aspirant, after this test was told he could not fly. He stood in blank amazement, shivered, and almost burst into tears. He could hardly dress. As in a trance, carrying his collar and tie, he tiptoed toward the door and disappeared.

Blindfolded, I was told to put one foot firmly on the other and hop in a straight line. Seated, hot water alternating with cold was poured into one ear, then the other. Again, I was dizzy and afraid.

"How do you feel?"

"Good! Good!" He smiled, "You should be."

During the hearing test the officer, standing fifteen feet away, told me to repeat whispered words. His lips moved but the roar of a passing plane drowned his voice.

"Well?"

"I cannot hear with that engine roaring."

"Fine!"

Another failed and two of us were left. Countless questions pertained to health, habits, hygiene, and the examination ended with a regulation hospital test for blood, urine and so on. During this period each man was alone.

Lucky

Outside the building stood the other "successful" chap.

"Well, you and I are lucky to have passed those tests."

He did not answer, but offered me a cigarette.

"Thank you, but I've decided not to smoke for awhile—want to be fit as possible when we start training."

"I've no reason to stop—I won't be training—not for flying, anyway."

"What's the matter? I thought that you and—"

"Me? Oh, I'm swell!" he said bitterly. "A perfect man, almost. No flat feet, nothing, but they think my great-grandmother had lumbago. Lumbago! Sure! But—good luck to you." He grabbed my hand, pressed it and hurriedly walked away.

The next morning the medical officer reported my physical condition excellent, said he was recommending me to Washington, and there was nothing further to be done but wait for instructions from the War Department.

Ten days later, with instructions from Washington to enlist as Private, First Class, in the aviation section of the Signal Corps and to proceed to the ground school at the University of Texas, I again rushed to the recruiting station.

Still they knew nothing. Furthermore, although my orders were explicit, they refused to follow them and tried to dissuade me—in fact, insisted on enlisting me as a private in the Signal Corps. I flatly refused. An argument ensued. An elderly major read the order and, shaking his bald head, said that he personally would wire Washington for further instructions.

More days of waiting.

Later I learned that many, certain they were signing up for the Air Service, were doomed to build roads, lay wires, dig ditches, but never fly. Had I left the matter of enlistment to the recruiting station this would have been my lot.

Finally, on July 9th, enlisted as Private, First Class, in the aviation section of the Signal Corps, I packed a suitcase and started for Texas.

Reports Late

Reporting a day late, I was greeted with an oration on "Discipline" and told to purchase army clothes in Austin. Under the impression that once in the Army all wearing apparel was furnished, this surprised me but, completely subdued by my recent experiences, I felt no desire to argue.

That afternoon an order to drill was issued.

There I stood, serious and erect, in my first formation. My two extremities, the only reminders of the garb of a private citizen, stood out in bold relief, for on my head sat a swank, grayish-green cap and my feet were giddy in pointed tan shoes. In between there was a colorful display of my recent and hasty purchases—baggy, voluminous, olive drab breeches; ill-fitting brown canvas leggings and a golden-yellow cotton shirt.

Had I realized my pathetically droll appearance it is doubtful if I would have drilled at all, for my cap and shoes proved targets for the drill sergeant.

"Hey, you in the green cap—step lively!" or "You, in the swell shoes—get in line!"

Intense Interest

We studied the rigging and construction of aeroplanes, motors, transportation, astronomy, meteorology, telegraphy, drilling, calisthenics and army discipline. Many said that the rules and regulations at this ground school were as strict as at West Point, and, fresh from the freedom of civilian life, the confinement and routine were a hard task.

Days were full. Reveille at five-thirty; a run around the campus (the distance depending on the inclination of the regular army sergeant who led the chase); breakfast; classes until noon; luncheon; more classes until late afternoon, then drill; following the evening meal a study period until nine-fifteen and at nine-thirty lights were out.

Saturday afternoons were set aside for vaccinations and inoculations which left us weak with no ambition or strength to enjoy Sunday—our one day of freedom.

July in Texas is hot! It was a common occurrence for those from cooler climates to collapse while drilling. Falling, they were dragged to a shady spot and left to recuperate while the survivors continued.

Each week the student body assembled on the campus. This was always an occasion of intense interest. We listened with breathless apprehension as the names of students who had failed in studies or had broken any one of a number of regulations were solemnly read. These were discharged and could no longer hope to become fliers. Owing to the dreadful uncertainty I decided that if this happened to me I would join the Canadian Air Force, known to be more lenient.

At the end of the third week, passing from the junior into the senior class, each student was called before the "Benzine Board," which consisted of civilian instructors and army officers, whose duty it was to judge each student as to his personal qualifications to become an officer.

Every attempt was made to embarrass us. The questions asked by this high and mighty council seemed without sense, rhyme or reason.

"Who was the Queen of Sheba in 400 B. C.?"

"Why is a cow?"

"What is a tree?"

"Describe the different gaits of a horse."

One student was asked: "How old are you?"

"Twenty-one and a little over, sir," he answered nervously.

"How much over?"

"A year and three months, sir."

"That is all. Report to the adjutant this afternoon at 3 o'clock."

He was discharged.

Early in September the course was finished. We were cadets! Each was given ten days' leave and this afforded many the opportunity to return to their homes before commencing actual flying training. Impossible to travel to Seattle and back in the allotted time; I remained in Texas.

When the other students returned it was rumored that seventeen of us were to be sent direct to France.

To be ordered to France without preliminary training in the states was a great honor, as but a few from each school were picked for preliminary flying instruction across the sea.

What News?

What news? Who would go? I was radiant when told that I was one of the seventeen.

I was going to FRANCE?

We packed our belongings. What a business it was! What baggage! Bags, packages, bundles, clumsily thrown together; fingers were feverishly with excitement and I remember my small grip and leather suitcase.

"We'll train under French instructors who have actually flown in the war."

"Say, we'll be at the Front before we know it."

Then how I wanted to see my parents and my sister—how I longed to say good-bye! It was impossible. Going to France—to fly—to war—without a word of farewell.

New York.

We hurried to the Battery, boarded a launch for Bedloes Island, and there, beneath the Statue of Liberty, our detachment of cadets, numbering 120 and chosen from every ground school in the country, assembled.

None had had any flying training. All eagerly awaited the great adventure. We slept in tents; lined up for meals, awkwardly using our recently issued mess kits.

We sensed the great excitement of men who leave their own country to fight, on foreign soil, against a common enemy.

The quartermaster's department, seething with activity, issued clothing suitable for cold weather. Scrambling for woolen overcoats, uniforms, shoes, shirts, underwear, socks and hats became a ritual.

As we invariably received the wrong size, there was a continual exchange of clothes. A misfit for one cadet was a perfect suit for another and in a few days we felt presentable.

Hurried trips were made to New York. We never stayed more than a short time, as orders to sail were ever rumored, expected and hoped for.

"What's the delay now?"

"Heard any news?"

"Why don't they send us?"

"Leave for France"

Stimulated with excitement it was almost impossible to think sanely.

The first week in October was raw; early one damp, chilly morning we were abruptly awakened.

"You're leaving for France!"

At last it had happened. The day had come. Half awake we hurriedly dressed, prepared for inspection, lined up beside the rows of little tents and—waited. A major appeared. He looked us over. His expression was one of utter disgust.

"Attention!" he roared.

We stood there, still as ramrods.

"Prepare for inspection, March!"

Arrogant, he strutted down the opened ranks and gazed into our startled, sleepy eyes; lashed each man with a caustic remark and said we were, without a doubt, the poorest looking crowd of men he had ever inspected. He told us that it was necessary to pass through New York on our way to Montreal.

"You are anything but soldiers and I doubt if you ever will be. You can't fool me but when we go through New York for God's sake try and fool the public."

If any of us had felt, before, the slightest degree of importance he quickly changed his mind. But—we were leaving for France! What did it matter? What did anything the major said or thought matter? Nothing mattered! We were off!

Our train arrived in Montreal. Trucks carried us to the pier where the S.S. Meganic was docked and, without a moment's delay, we boarded the steamer, already crowded with soldiers of machine gun companies.

The Meganic, not yet refitted for the transporting of troops, was clean, comfortable and furnished as in peace times.

Oliver Beauchamp, a graduate from the Cornell ground school, was assigned with me to a large outside stateroom. Cornell was my college. This additional bond strengthened a casual acquaintance into that rare and sacred friendship known to men in times of war only.

The trip down the St. Lawrence was one of absolute freedom. Our commanding officer, not aboard but arranging for baggage left behind through error, was to join us at Halifax. The steamer became a casino. Staterooms were riotous with varied forms of gambling. High stakes, low stakes, depending on the number of the room.

In Halifax harbor the Meganic was joined by twelve other ships. The convoy complete, it steamed forth on its wartime mission. An English battleship bade us God Speed. Sailors, in a straight white line, stood along the decks of this massive man-of-war while the soul stirring music of national anthems floated across the grey water.

Silent men, thinking men, pulses quickening with the realization of it all, stood hushed and strangely solemn.

Twelve ships at sea—twelve ships of steel—twelve ships in close formation, is an inspiring picture. Brazen by day; black by night; onward-onward-onward close together; a moving panorama that one watched with interest hour after hour.

Swish of Wares

The days were filled with lifeboat drill, poker games, submarine watch, crap shooting and talks on discipline. The possibility of a submarine attack caused vague expectations.

Warned that not a ray of light must escape at night, definite announcement was made that any man found responsible for

Not just another good war story, but acclaimed by noted authors and an appreciative reading public as the greatest true tale to come from that maelstrom of blood and steel, that almost stripped the world of its manhood, "Heaven High—Hell Deep," beginning in serial form in today's Boston Evening American, gives an uncensored account of the thrilling, mad and despairing days that went together to form a soldier's life in wartime.

Fly with the author in those crazy uncertain training planes. Thrill with him when he finally earns his pilot's rating and is sent to the front to aid in stemming the advancing tide of the enemy.

Norman Archibald, who is not a professional author, with untutored genius, because he has actually lived these experiences, makes you sick with apprehension when a buddy fails to return with the flight, makes you thrill with anticipation of an aerial duel with the enemy, makes you feel the thud of bullets as they tear at his frail plane.

In fact, every experience is relived by the reader.

Start this story today and follow it every day in the Boston Evening American.

The wind was freezing. We hugged the warm smokestack while the ship tossed like a cork in the sea.

NAZI In New Drive ON JEW

BERLIN LAYS WAR PLANS

By Associated Press

Berlin, March 12—Evidence that a new wave of anti-Semitism is sweeping Germany is contained in weekly publications of various sorts appearing on the newsstands these days.

Both Jewish and anti-Semitic publications indicate that the recent efforts of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, Reich minister of economics, and Julius Lippert, state commissioner for Berlin, to assure Jews of at least economic equality have not been strongly supported by the Nazi party.

The current "Deutscha Wochenschau" warns the automobile industry against failure to resist a Jewish invasion.

"Because Jews destroyed our economic life — then shall they be allowed to participate in its recovery?" it asks.

Urged to Go

Braunschweiger Zeitung berates the League of German Noblemen for having declared in its official organ:

"Strict application of the Aryan clause has entailed a regrettable loss of valuable members."

At Angermuende, orders were issued by police that organizations which train young Jews to be farmers or artisans in Palestine should be given preferred treatment compared with organizations which encourage Jews to remain in the country of their birth and consider themselves German.

In connection with a nation-wide contest among German boys and girls for decorating show windows, which will take place next week, Jewish youths and Jewish store windows are barred.

Publishers Barred

Jewish store owners have been ordered to permit their Gentile employes, who are learning the art of window dressing, to construct their competitive displays in the windows of stores owned by Gentiles, which may often mean their competitors.

The propaganda ministry of Dr. Paul Joseph Goebels has advised publishers that Jews must no longer have anything to do even with the commercial aspects of the publishing business.

One ironical illustration of anti-Semitic activity comes directly from Lippert's own Berlin administration, which requires that any person applying for a concession for renting chairs in public parks must supply evidence that he is a pure Aryan.

MULLONEY Dominant

SAYS LOGAN

Daniel C. Mulloney, president of the closed Federal National Bank, was regarded by everybody as "a man of pretty dominant character." He was relied upon to straighten out all difficulties in the affairs of the Brockton Trust Company. This was testified today by Malcolm J. Logan, who admitted he himself was president of the Brockton Trust Company in name only.

Logan was under examination by Attorney Robert G. Dodge, counsel for the receiver of the Federal National Bank, which is being sued by four subsidiaries for $3,200,000.

Asked if Harold Curtis, treasurer of the Brockton Trust Company, told him securities of the bank exceeded the legal limit, Logan said he may have, but he was not certain.

"Mr. Mulloney always gave prompt attention to these matters," testified Logan.

"I was dealing with the Federal National, the parent bank. Mr. Mulloney of that bank was regarded by everybody as a man of pretty dominant character. He was the man we relied on."

Next Best to a Real Audience Is a Mirror

Of all the things a young woman, three-and-a-half years old, has to do when she's learning to be an actress, this is the nicest. Posing before a mirror, as she practices taking a bow, just comes natural to little Barbara Lyon, daughter of Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon, screen and stage stars, appearing here in the farce comedy, "Hollywood Holiday." With Miss Gertrude Dolan as instructor, Barbara is starting already on preparations for a theatrical career. (Picture by Boston Evening American Staff Photographer.)

showing a light would be tried as a spy. Smoking on deck after dark was prohibited and a submarine watch was assigned to the cadets.

As far as I knew each cadet, with one exception, fulfilled this duty earnestly and conscientiously. My roommate Beauchamp, a firm believer in fate, had an utter disregard for danger, rules or army regulations.

"What's going to happen will happen," he would say.

His mere presence brought such an atmosphere of lightheartedness that I began to think him to forget care and worry.

Two a. m.

He was on watch and, scheduled to relieve him, I crept in the pitch dark along the top deck.

"Beauchamp!" No answer.

"Beauchamp! here I am." Not a sound.

"Beauchamp—where are you?" Only the swish of the waves broke the black silence of a black night. Was this the wrong part of the boat?—surely it was the place.

"Beauchamp! Beauchamp!" I shouted, and a horrible fear gripped me.

Could he, in the dark, have lost his footing and fallen overboard? Standing by a lifeboat, trying to think, listening intently—a slight noise, the sound of heavy breathing, became audible. There at my feet, in the shelter of the lifeboat, lay Beauchamp, peacefully sleeping. Forcibly I roused him.

"All this red tape is a pack of nonsense," he yawned. "What's going to happen will happen."

Thirty hours from Liverpool our convoy was met by twelve torpedo-boat destroyers. Safe in the harbor on the evening of the 17th of October, we disembarked.

A light rain was falling as we boarded a typical fourth-class European train. A feeble whistle, a jerk, the train moved, with baggage and cadets overcrowding each compartment, bumped over the rails to an unknown destination.

Noon of the next day.

Cramped and weary after a miserable night, we marched three miles to an abandoned English camp near Borden and spent the night in a water-soaked field.

Twelve tents, askew in the mud, some half up and many down, were shelter for one hundred and twenty men. Food, all-important, necessitated the use of mess kits forgotten on our luxurious trip across the ocean.

Some attempted to fix the tents, others foraged for bread which, with hot soup made in discarded tin cans, was our supper.

We crowded into the tents, lay down and, without blankets or covering, tried to keep warm. The wind blew a gale, rain fell, and the cold made sleep impossible.

Suddenly, with a howl, the wind tore the tents from the pegs, leaving us with no protection against the storm. The rest of the night was spent building fires and huddling around them for warmth. At daylight, after managing to make some tasteless coffee, we left for the railroad station.

On the outskirts of Southampton, our next stop, was a row of tents—a so-called "Rest Camp." Again, twelve to a tent, we crowded in, lay down and tried to be comfortable on cold, damp ground. Rations here were soup, bread and cheese. Always hungry, frequent trips were made to the city but as war regulations made it impossible to eat enough in one place to satisfy our appetites we visited several restaurants, eating all that was allowed in each. Confronted with the lack of food, we saw how England carried on.

A few German prisoners dug roads and now and then an aeroplane flew above.

Several days later, in the early afternoon, we prepared to leave. Although constantly cold, hungry and sleepless there was never a complaint. Everyone was in good humor and full of enthusiasm, for we were nearing France where flying would commence.

Men, women and children lined the streets as we marched through.

"Good Luck"

"God bless the Americans!"

"Cheerio! Good luck!"

Cheers and tears on every side; they tried to shake our hands and touch our uniforms.

How much they knew of war and we—how little

Food was still the major thought and, at the pier, we bought jam, canned meat, cheese and crackers. The steamer sailed late that afternoon and from that moment we gorged on cheese and crackers, corned beef and crackers, jam and crackers—then more crackers.

As darkness came we anchored in the harbor of Portsmouth. A high wind whistled through the rigging.

The only light was an occasional beam of searchlight sweeping the sky. Now and then its rays revealed a captive balloon, with its human parcel, whirled and swung before the gale.

Our boat, small and filthy, had recently been used for transporting cattle. Crowded with British troops in full war equipment, it was difficult to find space to sit down. The hold was assigned to the cadets, and with our baggage tacked around the beams, we set sail on a blackened sea, made rough by ever-increasing winds, for France.

No lights.

The ship pitched and tossed. The stench was unbearable, so Beauchamp and I decided to go above for a breath of fresh air. Stumbling blindly over a carpet of sleeping men, we reached the main deck, and were climbing a narrow gangway to the top.

"No one allowed on the top deck," a guard spoke sharply.

"We are," I began, "because—"

Because we're going on watch," supplemented Beauchamp and, pushing past, we reached a spot by the funnel.

The wind was freezing; we hugged the warm smokestack and the gale was fresh on our faces.

The ship groaned, creaked and lossed like a cork as waves smashed against her sides. We had difficulty in holding on. The shadowed glimpse of an escorting destroyer, tossing through the rough sea, was swallowed up and hidden from view by a gigantic wave.

The night, the dark, the heavy sea, and howling wind made real the actual danger of submarines. Everything loose was washed overboard; packs and rifles were swept from the deck and in one jumbled mess dumped into the sea.

Will there be a submarine attack? There is adventure and excitement in the next chapter. Don't miss tomorrow's American.

By Associated Press

Washington, Mar. 12—Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins today compelled a news photographer to turn over his plate to her after he had snapped her testifying before the Senate Labor Committee.

Miss Perkins broke off her testimony on the Wagner Labor Bill when the photographer took a flash light without first asking her permission.

"Would you give me that plate please?" she snapped, flushing.

The photographer turned to Chairman Walsh (D-Mass.) with a questioning look.

Walsh nodded, and the photographer handed the plate to Miss Perkins. She poked it under her handbag lying on the table in front of her.

The incident occurred while the Secretary was telling the committee the Labor relations Board should stay in her department.

The Wagner Bill would create a permanent, independent Labor Relations Board.

Held as Slayer

Detroit, March 12 (INS)—A man suspected of being Merton Ward Goodrich, mad Ohio musician, sought for the murder of 11-year-old Lillian Gallagher, is under arrest in Sedalia, Mo., police said today.

Barbara Upsets 'The Duke'; Film Babies Dance Here

By PAUL WHELTON

Barbara has started dancing lessons and "The Duke" is very disturbed about it all.

For more than a year, Barbara Lyon and Richard Gallagher—they are now 2½ and 4½ years have been inseparable.

Off the lots in Hollywood they played together. When Barbara's parents—Ben Lyon and Bebe Daniels—left Hollywood in January with Skeets Gallagher—father of Richard, "The Duke,"—it bothered Barbara and Richard not at all. They were still in Hollywood and still playmates.

Last week, however, Richard and his 18-months-old sister, Pamela, "The Duchess," were whisked out of Hollywood and brought to Boston. Barbara was entrained at the same time to visit her Daddy's relatives in Connecticut.

It was all very confusing to both Barbara and "The Duke," but on last Friday everything straightened out again. They found themselves both living in the Hotel Braemore here.

And then things became very confusing again. They were still confusing today to "The Duke."

Each morning, Barbara leaves the seventh floor apartment before "The Duke" on the 10th floor can get down, and is taken to dancing school.

Richard thinks it is very silly that Barbara should be taking dancing lessons, and today he refused to follow in her footsteps, preferring to wait until afternoons, when he can be taken walking with her along the Charles River Esplanade.

But no matter what Richard's opinion's are, Ben Lyon and Bebe Daniels decided upon Boston as the city in which to start training of their daughter to follow in their stage and movie careers.

Yesterday, Barbara took her first dancing lesson, at the Delano-DePetro Theatrical Studios in Dudley street, Roxbury.

Standing at the exercise bar, with Miss Gertrude Dolan instructing, the little Hollywood girl received her first training in limbering-up exercises and then was shown the first rudiments of tap dancing.

Each day while the comedy "Hollywood Holiday," in which Ben and Bebe and Skeets are co-starred plays at Boston's Plymouth Theater, Barbara will take a dancing lesson from Miss Dolan.

"I want Barbara to acquire grace and poise early," said Bebe. "With Miss Dolan's help we expect to make a star of her."

But "The Duke" is very much bothered about it all. There thus sand miles from where he and Barbara were parted, he finds that they are parted again for several hours daily.

"Just what Barbara a couple of months ago," said Bebe, "who she was going to marry. She said, 'I'm going to marry Duke' I said, "Well, what does Duke say to that?" She said, "Well, he told me no, but I'm going to marry him just the same."

"Barbara and the Duke are really very much smitten with each other and you'd be surprised to see how jealous they become if some other kid takes away one or the other."

WALSH'S Guilt Limited BY COURT

offender in an illegal arrest may kill a police officer and in the absence of expressed malice, which was present in the Phelps case, the law says the provocation of the killing mitigates the offense to manslaughter.

"That is the law and that is the situation in this case, and I am going to instruct the jury that any verdict in excess of manslaughter is not justified by the evidence in this case."

"Illegal Arrest"

Scharton argued in open court today with the jury excused. Almost all day yesterday, he had argued in the judge's chambers.

In reviewing the state testimony Scharton said:

"Antico testified that McLain got out of his car after he saw Walsh walking along the street and grabbed the defendant.

"When the officer grabbed Walsh, that constitutes an arrest and, in this case, an arrest without a warrant.

"Antico said some talk ensued between Walsh and McLain and then the two men started walking toward the car.

"When they reached the car, McLain asked Antico: "Is this the man" and the evidence shows that Antico replied: "He's the man."

"But then, the evidence shows that Walsh asked what it was all about. Walsh was quoted as saying: 'Here, let's straighten this thing out. What's it all about?'

"At this point the evidence shows that Antico told McLain to 'frisk him.' The defendant put his hand in his pocket. There was a struggle and then there were shots. McLain fell to the ground."

State's Reply

In arguing against Scharton's motion, Assistant District Attorney Edward Bushnell said that McLain had "every reason to believe the defendant had committed a felony." He continued:

"Officer McLain had no opportunity to go into details as to whether the arrest was legal or not. It was his first duty to see that the prisoner was in safe custody, and he was in performance of this duty when he was killed.

"The Legislature never intended to pass a law that permits a person to pull out a gun and kill a policeman and then come into court and claim an illegal arrest.

"The very fact that Officer McLain was in full uniform was enough authority to show he had the right to question Walsh.

"On top of this, we have evidence that Walsh not only fired one shot, but, when the policeman was down, deliberately fired another shot through his head.

"The crime calls for punishment for murder and not for manslaughter or any other offense."

Cites "No Malice"

The Phelps case referred to in Judge Brown's ruling was cited by Scharton.

Phelps killed an arresting officer.

There had been a previous arrest in the case and Phelps had threatened the officer he eventually killed.

In this case the court ruled the jury had the right to infer Phelps had malice towards the officer because of the threat and Phelps was found guilty of murder.

Scharton cited the case as one of contrast, showing existence of malice.

He argued that in the case of Walsh there was no malice.

McKENNA CASE Arguments Open

John J. McKenna of Hillside street, Roxbury, exalted ruler of the Boston lodge of Elks, denied attacking Patrick F. McCarron of South avenue, Weston, lodge secretary, when he took the stand as a witness in his own defense.

McCarron had accused him of burning his feet with matches, pouring water over him, and cutting flesh from part of his body. Judge John M. Gibbs and the superior court jury heard arguments of counsel today.

ALBERINI Divorced by CAPE DIVA

Barnstable, March 12—Mrs. Martha Attwood Alberini of Wellfleet, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera Company, today was granted an uncontested divorce from Alessandro Alberini of New York by Judge Collen C. Campbell in probate court here.

Alberini, a concert artist, did not appear and was not represented.

His wife, who was granted the right to assume her maiden name, testified her husband used abusive language and struck her.

A friend, Beverly Peck of New York, testified Alebrini told her he did not know why he had not killed Mrs. Alberini.

No al mony was requested.

Alberini married Martha Atwood, a descendant of a seafaring family that has always made its home on Cape Cod, on February 10, 1926, in New York, a year after her debut with the Metropolitan Opera Company.

They often appeared together in opera and radio performances.

COTTON LAW To Stand

Washington, March 12 (AP)—Senator Smith (D., S. C.) said he understood President Roosevelt would soon issue a statement "reassuring the nation there will be no changes in the government's cotton policy."

Smith, chairman of the Senate agriculture committee, and Senator Bankhead (D., Ala.) will go to the White House for a conference.

Mussolini Has Extra Guard

20 Arrests in Plot on His Life Reported

By International News Service

Rome, March 12—Despite repeated denials that 20 armed foreigners have been arrested in the last week on suspicion of plotting against the life of Premier Mussolini, his two-mile automobile route from home to office has been changed.

Police do acknowledge that a traveler carrying a pistol was taken into custody recently.

Plainclothesmen frequently halt foreigners and Italians in the streets and demand identification papers. Questions regarding this activity meet with the reply:

"The police must be looking for someone."

Mussolini's new route from his home to his office is lined each day with plainclothesmen.

This was officially described as "purely precautionary." Rumors of a plot on Mussolini's life were helped along by an article in Italian newspapers telling of the deportation of a Mexican discovered in the Vatican with a stiletto.

Junior League Exhibition Attracts Many

By BETTY ALDEN

IT WOULD BE REVEALING, to those who so frequently express the opinion that society women are cold, superficial creatures, to view the members' exhibition of paintings and sculptures, which opened at the Junior League yesterday . . .

By far the greater number of subjects chosen by the member artists were portraits of human beings and things which in newspaper parlance are "human interest" . . .

ISABELLA GRANDIN

Though we make no pretence at being an art critic, we have often been able to guess the depth of character of an artist by the warmth of the subject he portrays . . . as a rule one who chooses "human interest" subjects . . . rather than the purely aesthetic, though beautiful, landscapes . . . is a person who is closely in sympathy with the facts and fancies of human existence . . .

Hostesses

THE EXHIBIT IS SO LARGE that it overflows from the gallery to the ballroom, where "Jamie," the happy, innocent youngster; "Toshi," the Eskimo girl from the frozen north, with her wistful eyes, and the thoughful "Eleanor" all gazed down yesterday at the Junior Leaguers assembled for tea and a lecture by Mr. Harold D. Walker . . .

Many of the Leaguers could not resist the temptation to spend the afternoon out-of-doors, so they will have the pleasure of viewing the works of their fellow-members on a later day, one more conducive to indoor pursuits . . .

Following Mr. Walker's remarks, Mrs. Samuel Bowditch and Miss Isabella Grandin took their places at the tea table to pour, while Miss Virginia Ellis and Mrs. Joseph Coletti acted as hostesses and guides to the guests . . .

A regular Smith College reunion took place at Mrs. Bowditch's end of the table, where a group of girls who graduated around 1927 congregated to talk over old times . . .

Among these were Isabel Porter, who has carved out a career for herself in landscape architecture . . . Babby Gilpin Yerxa, whose time is mostly occupied with her little daughter . . . Virginia Ellis, one of the important executives of the League . . . and Jean Douglas Abbott . . .

Mrs. Bowditch, who wore a tailored oxford gray suit with a close-fitting turban, is the former Polly Rogers . . .

Isabella Grandin in Smart Tailleur

A BRIGHT TAILLEUR of navy blue with dusty pink collar and cuffs was chosen by Isabella Grandin for her costume . . . While she poured she chatted gayly with Mrs. Charles Hibbard, Jr., smartly attired in a slim black ensemble, her dark hat worn with a pronounced off the face tilt . . .

Aside from these costumes there were no startling sartorial effects to give one a fillip . . . Fur capes and woolen dresses were the dominant fashion notes . . .

Mrs. Robert C. Terry sauntered in to listen to the lecture and greet several friends . . .

Barbara Bradford circled the gallery several times to see how her painting of a Maine fishing boat fared as it hung between two canvasses depicting potted plants . . .

There were Saltonstalls and Wigglesworths among the exhibitors . . . Elizabeth Saltonstall's canvasses attracted much attention as the word got around that she is soon to open a one-man show at the Vose Galleries . . .

Mrs. Charles Higginson, Mrs. George Hoague, Jr., lingered before the head of a Chinese woman, the charcoal of Aimee Lamb's which was awarded first medal in the drawings class . . . Ann Peterson won a medal with her Still Life . . . Aline Kilham, Katherine Lane and Christine L. Reid were the others who received the top honors from the judges . . .

Ball and Newsboys

THE FIVE STAR FINAL BALL, for the benefit of the Burroughs Newboys' Foundation, first planned for February, will be held at the Barclay Club Friday.

The idea of the ball was conceived by Mr. Robert Powell Johns and Mrs. John C. Dinsmoor of the junior committee for the Burrows Newsboys Fund, in conjunction with Mr. Harry Taplin, executive secretary of the foundation.

The fund has been established for the purpose of sending deserving newsboys to college.

Miss Nancy Morison heads the entertainment committee.

The junior auxiliary committee for the dance comprises Miss Evelyn Hassman, Miss Mary Fuller, Miss Mary Morison and her sister, Miss Nancy Morison, Miss Ann Green, Miss Mary Hastings, Miss Barbara and Miss Janet Marston, Miss Grace Nelson, Miss Virginia Tolman and Miss Lansdale Watson.

Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard has joined the main committee, the other members of which are Mrs. John Dinsmoor, Mrs. Howard Key Bartow, Jr., Mrs. William S. Tayler, Mrs. Robert Powell Johns, Mrs. William L. Shearer, 3d, and Mrs. Hugh Bancroft, Jr.

OPERA BASSO Denies Romance

New York, March 12 (INS)—The reputed romance between Ezio Pinza and Elisabeth Rethberg of the Metropolitan Opera company is nothing more than professional admiration, Pinza said today.

Evincing great indignation at his wife's $250,000 alienation of affections suit, the handsome bassо heldi the existence of any basis for the charge.

School Brides Out

New York, March 12 (INS)—Six New York schoolgirls were expelled last year for marrying at 13, the Board of Education's statistical report revealed today.

THE BLACK CONSUL—By Anatoli Vinogradov—The Viking Press.

Here is a first history from a Soviet author to come on a country other than Russia. It is a narrative of Haiti and the French Revolution and it throws a new light on the course of French history out of the homeland.

Anatoli Vinogradov is 47 years old and has been writing for 25 years, mostly in the field of fictionized history. "The Black Consul," however, incorporates original sources which are woven into the body of the narrative.

The Revolution in France is the jumpoff here and the windup is in Haiti as a result of those early upstirrings.

Through the pages course Marat, Napoleon, Lafayette, Robespierre, Christophe, Lavoisier, Dr. Guillotin and others—and the climax comes when the Negroes fight their courageous battle for freedom.

Read this in a place where the children won't be interrupting.

THE BODY'S RAPTURE.—By Jules Romains—Liveright.

Some time, some place and somewhere someone dresses forth a novel of human behavior to match exquisite style against the tremblings of the censors.

"The Body's Rapture" is distinctly not Sunday school, but is a story of a man and woman to whom marriage was of lesser importance than being together. Yet they did marry.

A story of a provincial French town, with Lucienne a music teacher and Pierre a purser on leave—and with two of the pupils in love with him.

Copley Folk Entertain

MEMBERS of the Copley Society and their friends will be entertained at 206 Commonwealth avenue by a travel talk on the lure of the Far East by Miss Emma G. Cummings.

The talk will be illustrated by lantern slides made and colored by Miss Cummings.

The hostesses for the occasion will be Miss Helen G. Moseley, Miss Margarita G. Murdoch, Mrs. Calvin G. Page, Miss Evelyn Purdie and Mrs. William Stone.

PROTEST So. Boston HOUSING

THRONGS HIT U. S. PROJECT

"They either make you or break you,
But never forsake you,
In Southy—my ha-o-me town."

Greater than that claimed in the familiar ditty was the loyalty of South Bostonites displayed at the federal building today.

More than 200 stormed the office of the court clerk. Most of them were in mighty protest against seizure of their homes for the government's $5,000,000 housing project in the Old Harbor section.

Today was the last day for filing claims for damages that must be decided soon by a jury.

So great was the intermingled protests and confusion that the deadline was set ahead until 5 p. m. March 22.

Scores objected to the entire project. They don't want to leave the neighborhood—nor the houses the government says must be condemned.

Some few charged "rent gouging" in other sections of the Peninsular.

They were those who sought to live in other sections of South Boston.

Speeches—impromptu and to any who cared to listen—were delivered two or three at a time. Most were in protest. Others sought to assure the puzzled owners.

Petition Signed

In a corner of the clerk's office, Attorney Albert R. MacCusick set up temporary quarters at a table. He said he represented the Real Estate Owners and Tenants' League of Boston.

Several signed a petition he had that was in protest against the entire project.

Miss Mildred Chaney of East Seventh street, owner of two houses in the Newman street part of the area, said she stood on her "Yankee heritage" and would fight to the last ditch against seizure of her property. She said:

"I am a Yank, the ninth generation on my father's side and the tenth on my mother's.

"The government has no right to go into my business. I'm a realtor.

"If the government wanted it for a postoffice, for a barracks or for a hospital I'd say O. K.—welcome to it, here it is.

"Not Their Right"

'But, to come in and take my business away? That is not their right.

"I want a square deal and I'm going to see that I get it.

"Even if they gave me ten times its worth I wouldn't take it. It's the principle of the thing."

Francis L. Colpoys, a Suffolk County court officer and owner of property in Eighth street, worked through the crowd to call as many as possible. He faced a difficult task but made some progress.

Mrs. Alice Janeky of Old Harbor street aligned herself with those who protested. She said:

"I don't want to sell my house. It's good enough for me to live in. I don't think we'll get the money we're entitled to. Most of the people don't know what it's all about."

A semblance of verification on the latter was evidenced all around her. All the owners knew they were supposed to file claims today. Few knew exactly the legal entanglements.

Court Clerk James M. Allen announced that a date will be set for hearing the claims as soon as all are in. It is planned to have a jury decide the exact amount each owner will be given for his property.

Party Postponed

Members of the Ward 17 Democratic Club today postponed to March 21 the St. Patrick's Day festival which was scheduled for Thursday evening in Dorchester Manor. Previous appointments make it impossible for Governor Curley to attend on the earlier date.

Love and China

"AMBER ROSE"
BARBARA HUTTON MDIVANI

WORDS FOR BARBARA'S SONGS

"BECAUSE OF YOU"
MRS. VINCENT ASTOR

By Universal Service

New York, March 12 — The words of the songs written by Princess Barbara Hutton Mdivani, in collaboration with Miss Elsa Maxwell, were made public today by the music publishing house of G. Schirmer, Inc., which will bring them out this week.

They are two love songs and an oriental trilogy, the latter inspired by the honeymoon trip of Prince and Princess Mdivani to China.

They will be first sung in public by Lawrence Tibbett, Metropolitan Opera star.

The first song, "I WILL NOT GRIEVE," follows:

I will not grieve, though we may part
For you have now become my heart.
The sun mourns not though each day fly,
For in his soul days cannot die.
The sky sighs not on starless night,
In heaven's eyes stars burn as bright.
So I grieve not when we become
Like stars and sky, like days and sun.
I will not grieve.

(Copyright, 1935, by G. Schirmer, Inc.)

The music for all of the songs was written by Miss Maxwell to Princess Barbara's lyrics. The second song, "I NEED NO SONG," was dedicated by Miss Maxwell to "My good friend, Mrs. Vincent Astor." It follows:

I need no song my heart to woo,
For music sings because of you.
I need no tears to silence pain,
For you are sunlight, you are rain.
I need no more for beauty fear,
It crowds the earth when you are near.
Indeed no word to spend in prayer,
For heaven speaks when you are there.

(Copyright, 1935, by G. Schirmer, Inc.)

The oriental trilogy is being published in an album. These songs were written, Miss Maxwell said today, while Princess Barbara was ill, early in the winter. The first, "TEMPLE OF HEAVEN," follows:

Before the temple of heaven
I stood with bended head,
And wept to feel the soul of China dead.
My heart cried out for shame at Such a cruel thing—
The sight of perfect beauty crumbling
For weeds grow now twixt tiles
Of blue beyond compare,
Around the marble flagstones
Of the dragon stair.
The richly colored columns of Delicate design
Stand ravished by indifferent
Suns of time.
Oh, soul of ancient China! I
Sudden smiled to know
That beauty held within one's heart can never go.

(Copyright, 1935, by G. Schirmer, Inc.)

Of the second in the trilogy, "CHU-LI-MAI," Miss Maxwell said yesterday, it was "a beautiful fragment of porcelain—as beautiful as Barbara's soul." The song follows:

Chu-Li-Mai . . .
I will pluck my life like a crimson flow'r
Whose beauty may last perchance an hour,
To place it in your lacquered hair
And breathe away its fragrance there.
No lovelier death could I suppose
Than by your ear of amber rose . . .
Chu-Li-Mai.

VENIZELOS Escapes to ITALIAN ISLE

By International News Service

Rome, March 12—Eleutherios Venizelos, former Greek premier, who landed on the Italian island of Cassos in the Aegean sea, today faces indefinite incarceration, it was announced by the foreign office.

He "will be" interned, it was stated. He is not extraditable, however, it was added.

"I have abandoned politics forever and never will set foot on Greek soil again," Venizelos is quoted as saying.

His wife was with him on the cruiser Averoff and wept bitterly, it was said.

Greek Loyalists in Control at Crete

(Copyright, 1935, by The Associated Press)

Athens, March 12—Former Premier Venizelos was reported to have fled Crete simultaneously with surrender of all naval vessels, except the cruiser Averoff.

Loyalists regained control of Crete and government officials were restored to their offices, the report said.

The marine ministry was informed the rebel destroyers Psara and Leon and the submarine Nereus had been abandoned and were in the hands of loyal officers, who had been kept prisoners.

FISH Defense to Be INSANITY

By International News Service

White Plains, N. Y., March 12—With the twelve jurors selected for the murder trial of Albert H. Fish, Mrs. Delia Budd, of New York, today was prepared to take the stand and identify the ghostly little 65-year-old defendant as the ogre who lured her 10-year-old daughter, Grace, from home nearly seven years ago and murdered her.

Fish, who cringed in terror throughout the opening session of the trial yesterday, looked refreshed, almost pert, today. He began to evince a sly interest in the proceedings which may result in the electric chair for him.

Indications became stronger than ever that the defense will direct most of its efforts toward showing Fish insane.

Five of the accused man's children—children of four different marriages—were in court. The father, Albert, and a brother, Albert, 22, of the Budd girl were present.

TRUTH SERUM O. K.'d by Police

Harrisburg, Pa., March 12 (AP)—Major Lynn G. Adams, state police superintendent, announced today his department has accepted "truth serum" as another means of scientific criminal investigation rapidly replacing the much criticised "third degree" of the old-time police methods.

Satisfied with the first test made a few days ago in Bellefont, in which a suspect was exonerated after receiving an injection of scopolamine, Major Adams said the serum will be used "every time we have an opportunity."

OIL TANKER Aground in River

The oil tanker Mary Conway, carrying 40,000 gallons of oil, went aground in the Danvers River at the foot of Congress street, Beverly, today while on her way to the Pickering Brothers Wharf.

The craft was being piloted up the river for the first time when the bow went up on ground called "Muscle Shoal."

STATE WORKERS More Generous

State employes gave six times more to the Emergency Relief Campaign this year than they did last year.

Governor Curley, for the employes, turned over a check for $12,000 and there are promises which will swell the total to $37,970.

MILLENS Growl While ABE WALKS

Murton and Irving Millen growled at their guards in Dedham jail today as they watched Abe Faber exercise in the corridor outside his cell.

The Millens had expected transfer to State Prison and somehow had gained the impression that there would be restored to them the exercise privilege withdrawn at the jail following their last escape attempt.

"It would be better for us if we were taken over there," Murton growled. "We'd probably at least be allowed to walk up and down over there."

No official announcement was made, but lack of plans indicated the Millens and Faber will not be taken to prison until April 18, ten days before the week of their scheduled execution.

Threat of Faber's counsel, William R. Scharton, to start habeas corpus proceedings in the event of earlier transfer has convinced the authorities they should not take advantage of the new law allowing the county to send a murderer to the prison immediately after his conviction.

The three prisoners awaited visits from relatives. Faber expected his mother. The Millens expected to see their father and two of their sisters.

Although technically eligible for parole late this month, Norma Millen, girl wife of Murton, is not expected to seek freedom until final disposition of her husband's case.

HITLER TO SEND New Bid to Simon

Berlin, March 12 (AP)—Reichsfuehrer Hitler was expected today to renew his invitation to Sir John Simon, British Foreign Secretary, to confer with him here on European peace problems between March 25 and 31.

Hitler is resting in Bavaria and officials believe he will stay there ten days.

HEARST Lauded on 'OATH'

TEACHER REDS ARE SCORED

Branding teacher opponents of a teacher's oath "teacher's room radicals" and other opponents as "self appointed intelligenzia and self annointed illuminati," Professor Francis J. De Celles of the Boston College Law School, today lauded William Randolph Hearst and the Hearst newspapers for their battle for "all American teachers"

Professor De Celles, an executive officer of Cambridge Post, No. 27, of the American Legion, said:

"Legislation requiring school teachers to take an oath of allegiance to the United States has my wholehearted support. I have served in the elementary, secondary, college and university extension branches of our educational system.

"Is there any substantial opposition to it? I find none and I am in daily discourse with teachers and professors. Typical to type in the school sphere adversaries are the handful of teachers' room radicals who assailed William Randolph Hearst at Atlantic City for daring to advocate all American schools for all American pupils and students.

Prof. F. J. DeCelles

"Extra profession opponents are the self-appointed intelligenzia and the self-annointed illuminati. They read the high brow magazines and feel need of adopting an attitude that there is no merit in anything American.

"It is common knowledge that there are those who would teach subversive doctrines. No well informed educator would gainsay it. The teaching profession is the most patriotic group in America. It is the duty of the teachers to keep it that way.

"I am an ardent advocate of academic freedom. But I do not understand that 'academic freedom' gives me the right to undermine my nation.

"I do not believe that it includes teaching the future citizens of America the downfall or destruction of our governmental institutions while their parents, the citizens of America, pay for it.

"It does not insult me to ask me to pledge allegiance to the flag of my country or to take an oath to support my country. I took that oath when I donned her uniform in time of war."

Huey 'Ideal Sweetheart' Of Models

By Associated Press

New York, March 12—Senator Huey Long is the "ideal sweetheart" of exactly 68 of New York mannequins, the Professional Models League of America announced today.

Gertrude L. Mayer, president of the league, asked 300 mannequins this question:

"Who in the public eye today, whether married or single, would you select as your ideal sweetheart?"

Some of the reasons given by those choosing Senator Long:

"He is so good-natured"; "he is very charitable," and "he is a he-man and a fighter and he has such nice curly locks."

"Whew!" Says Long, as Models' Choice

Washington, March 12 (INS)—"Sixty-eight picked me for the ideal sweetheart? Whew! I say, I don't dare comment on that."

This was the only reply Senator Huey P. Long (D.), Louisiana, would make today after 68 models in New York had chosen him as their ideal sweetheart.

CONGRESS Bill Asks $112,260,809

By Associated Press

Washington, March 12—Funds for an air base in Hawaii, greater Coast Guard anti-smuggling activities and for more liberal pensions and other veterans' compensation contributed to a $112,260,809 total in the session's first big deficiency bill presented today to the House.

The measure, still $161,992 below budget estimates, would re-appropriate in addition $60,000,000 from emergency drought funds for making crop production loans to farmers under the 1935-36 act recently passed.

The appropriations committee recommended speed on the bill, particularly to make immediately available the so-called "seed loan" money, which members have been urging.

For final settlement of the noted "I'm Alone" case, the bill would provide $50,666.50—$25,000 to the government of Canada "for the wrong done that government by the firing upon and sinking of a Canadian vessel," and $25,666.50 to pay members of the crew.

Chevalier Peeved

Hollywood, March 12 (INS)—Irked over film roles submitted to him, Maurice Chevalier today had severed relations with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios and planned to leave, probably Saturday, for a vacation in his native France.

CUBANS Face Death in REVOLT

By International News Service

Havana, March 12—Death for all convicted of revolutionary terrorism was decreed by the cabinet today in drastic action to stamp out a strike that extended to every commercial activity in the island.

Anyone making an armed attack against police, soldiers or sailors, or who commits saboteur designed to shut off light, power or food supplies, comes under the execution order, said the decree.

Prison sentences of two to five years were proclaimed for scores of employes in government departments who joined the walkout aimed to oust President Mendieta.

The decree was issued in the government's third successive all-night sitting, while in the deserted streets rifles cracked intermittently as stragglers were challenged.

Two more were killed, bringing the confirmed death list to twelve, and eight were wounded when a bomb exploded in a bus in the suburb of Almendares.

An amazing statement about a refrigerator? Not if you know the Norge Rollator Refrigerator.

The surplus-powered Rollator cold-making mechanism is almost everlasting and it actually does improve with use! That's a proven fact. A Rollator on factory test, instead of becoming less efficient with use, became more efficient, used less current.

And that Rollator Compressor, by the way, has been running for the equivalent of 33 years in your home. It's still running.

We say Rollator Refrigeration effects household savings up to $11 a month. Ask your Norge dealer to prove it. Ask him for actual facts and figures to prove every statement he makes. He can do it. For the Norge is that kind of a refrigerator —and Norge dealers are that kind of merchants.

Sharlene's 'Kiss Test' Convincing

CHAPTER 49

"Look here, Sharlene. Of course I didn't know your mother was dead that night. I wrote you all about that."

She was silent, remaining standing so that he could neither sit down nor feel at ease. He had to flounder on presently.

"Of course that made me seem a brute. Naturally, if I'd known about your mother, I wouldn't have acted—just as I did."

"Her death had nothing to do with it!" Sharlene said quietly.

She was watching him intently, never taking her eyes from him.

It had been that way since he had first confronted her at Stuart's front door. It embarrassed him but the embarrassment was apparently all on his side. She seemed in some still, deep way to be watching herself, too. Yet he could sense no rancor nor hatred in her tone when she spoke. She was an enigma. He moved restlessly.

"Look, Sharlene," he began again unwillingly, "this Julie thing was only an infatuation. I knew at the time it wouldn't last."

"Yes, I know," she said gravely. "Infatuations don't last—do they?"

"No. That's why I said what I did. Couldn't you be big enough to—forgive?"

"You love me, Sharlene! You know you do! More than anything in the world! I could always count on that. Forget what I said. I was a fool—I didn't mean it!"

She was looking deeply into his eyes. He could not read her look, but since she did not resist him, he drew her into his arms and kissed her again and again.

'Only a Test'

As Stuart drove his car into the garage, he noticed a handsome limousine standing at the gate. He took his many heavy packages from the back of the car and started up the steps. Then he tuurned and spoke to the chauffeur.

"Whose car is this?"

"Mr. Kent Damerell's, sir."

Sharlene had pulled herself away from Kent, but his eager arms enclosed her again.

"Sharlene!" he said triumphantly. "I knew I'd win you back. Kiss me!"

"Oh, don't!" she cried.

"But—" Again he drew her closer.

"It was only a test—" She pushed him violently away from her so that he backed into the delicate carved doors of the shrine, in front of which they had been standing. There was the sound of splintering wood.

"Oh, see what you've done!" she wailed. "That lovely carving—"

He paid no attention. "Now look here, Sharlene—"

Stuart came into the back porch with a great clatter so that the two in the studio should know he had arrived.

Then the front door closed with a thud. Stuart waited. Tense. There was a long silence. He started forward, wondering if it were possible that Sharlene would go without telling him.

"Where's Damerell—"

"He's gone. . . . You were wrong, Stuart. It's just as I told you. I knew he cut himself out of my heart that night. There's no regret—no feeling—at it."

Hides Her Tears

"Sharlene—are you sure?"

"Yes. I was fair. I even let him kiss me—to see if he could stir me, as you said." She shuddered. "I told him I was going to Reno tomorrow. But there's really no hurry. I don't care—about anything—"

She was picking at a bandage on her finger to hide the tears welling into her eyes.

"How did you hurt yourself?"

"It's nothing—paring potatoes."

"Why all the drudgery, Sharlene? You didn't need to do it. You didn't need my help. Why the elaborate pretense?"

She drew back a little, frightened. "What do you mean?"

"Folsom says a great part of your fortune is still intact. You're still a very rich woman."

"Oh, for pity's sake!" She flung herself away. "I can give it away, can't I?"

"Just tell me this. Why did you come up here pretending to be penniless?"

"Oh, Stuart, can't you see? . . . I wanted to prove that I'm not an expensive article—that you could work with me—we could work together. But it was no use. You found me a nuisance just as you said—"

"But why, Sharlene, did you come here to prove—"

As if hypnotized she moved across the floor and pushed aside the door, banging broken on its hinges.

For a long time she gazed at the picture, and then Stuart became aware of her soft sobbing.

"Oh, Stuart, your shrine! I'm so sappy—so happy!"

He stood very still, waiting, his blue eyes growing dark. She looked up at him through a maze of tears. "You do love me, Stuart—as you did that night?"

"Yes," he said simply. "Of course. But—"

"Oh, don't you see, dearest—that's why I came up here? And I thought I'd failed to win back what I'd thrown away. But this shrine—Oh, Stuart! I love you—I worship you—I want you!"

He looked deeply into her eyes then suddenly believing, he took her into his arms. And this time their kiss was not disturbed by shadows or by ghosts . . .

"You can support me in the style I like," she told him, "and the old money's just our insurance. But I think we'd better never tell the children we have it—"

"The children?" he asked quizzically.

"Yes. My job. You won't mind—if I keep 'em from bothering you?"

He laughed and hugged her close. "Oh, darling, darling—you shall have your job—just so you don't forget that I'm here . . . Tell me, Sharlene, when did you begin to love me?"

"I think it's been always, since the day I knocked you off the horse. Kent dazzled me—but I knew there was no one in the world like you, from the day I married—him."

They looked at each other with deep understanding.

She turned toward the painting in the niche. They both looked up at it: The Indian maid and the Indian man on the marble balcony at Jal Samand. The steadfast love that was like a holy flame leaping in the eyes of the man.

An answering love, holding all the tenderness and wisdom of the ages in the eyes of the woman. And the eyes of the Indian maid, above her gossamer veil, were the eyes of Sharlene.

For Days of Relaxation Ahead

By Annice Brink

AS HEAVENLY cool as it is dainty, this frock knitted in a lacy leaf pattern. Though fur coats are still much in evidence, it's not too soon to start making it. Perfect for at-homes, for the country club, for every week-end outing. It is two-piece, which means the top may do double duty with a suit. Complicated though it looks, the stitch is not difficult, and done with big needles takes less than half the usual time a hand-knit needs—and costs much less, too. If you wish for knitting instructions, write Annice Brink, Fashion Editor, Boston Evening American, inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Hair Stimulant

—POSED BY SYLVIA SIDNEY

New Tonic Effectively Checks Baldness

By the Beauty Editor

WHY IS IT that men greet the idea of using feminine hair preparations with hostility?

It's been years since anyone has listened to them on the subject of bobs, swirls and bright nail polishes—yet try to reason with them about their vanishing hair.

Only when their scalps have degenerated to the point of starvation, and baldness is threatened, do they greet the matter with any degree of neutrality.

It is next to impossible to feel young if your hair looks old. Many men who were proud of their hair a few years ago today are avidly trying every preparation they have ever heard of in a frantic effort to check approaching baldness.

A stimulus hair tonic that will replenish natural oils, insure that well-groomed look and prevent dandruff has been the pet of this department for a long time. In fact, we've seen dull, lifeless hair recapture the fine glint of youth after continued use of this stimulant.

If your husband or brother is really looking for a proven aid in overcoming severe loss of hair through the lack of proper glandular secretions, do let him in on this secret. This tonic is for men as well as women, and because it contains an abundance of vegetable oils and glandular derivatives, increases the natural functioning of the hair follicles.

The tonic comes in a convenient shaker top bottle. Used faithfully every day this tonic will promote normal scalp and hair health. I can only tell you that it will do all that is claimed of it and that it is essentially a man's tonic.

To learn the name of this stimulus tonic and where it is sold, telephone Miss Shelby, Liberty 4000, or write to the Beauty Editor, Boston Evening American, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Beauty Answers

Question: My hands are so rough looking that I am really ashamed of them. I do my own housework and sometimes my washing, so I suppose this accounts for their unattractive appearance. Please tell me what I can do to make them soft and smooth again.

MRS. HELEN McS., Attleboro.

Answer: Never allow your hands to become "water soaked," as it is bound to make the surface rough. Avoid strong soaps when going through household chores, and always wear rubber gloves when polishing furniture or doing grime-collection work. Keep a bottle of soothing hand lotion on the kitchen shelf and use it frequently during the day. A vigorous massage now and then with cocoa butter or lanoline is helpful. I have a recipe for a home-made cucumber hand lotion which you may have by writing to me again, enclosing a stamped, self addressed envelope.

Question: A number of large, brown spots have appeared on my face and neck. I have tried bleaching them with peroxide but without much success. Do you know of any treatment for these blemishes?

MRS. ANNA M., Melrose.

Answer: Yes. I have an anti-brown spot leaflet which will help you. This leaflet contains a home-made remedy for treating these discolorations and also gives the names of several preparations on the market. Brown spots are quite apt to make their appearance in the spring of the year, when the blood is in poor condition and the liver is torpid. To obtain this anti-brown spot leaflet, write me again, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope for a personal reply.

Question: I wrote to you several weeks ago requesting the name of the milk masque you mentioned in your column. I never received a reply. Besides milk, this masque also contained epsom salts and eggs in powdered form. Will you kindly send the desired information to me as soon as possible? T. E. W., Newton.

Answer: Only requests which are accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelopes will receive personal replies. Since you neglected to enclose necessary return postage with your letter, this information, naturally, was not sent to you. If you care to write again enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope I will be glad to furnish you with the name of the milk masque and the store where it may be purchased.

Send your order to Boston American Pattern Department, 232 West 18th street, New York, N. Y.

Gabardine Shoes

FABRIC shoes are a big favorite for this season. They are seen in many different types. Our favorites were those in a kind of home-spunish material, and those with flecks that gave a tweedy appearance. These shoes are nearly always trimmed with leather stripings or bandings. Gabardine is another important fabric.

For Little Women

Suits are a growing fashion for girls about 8 to 16. The belted jacket type, or the swagger suit is seen about the most. This past winter has even seen knitted suits for girls, and there is no reason why this fashion should not become important.

Unusual Defense

On the hand below, played in the Pair Event of the Grand National championship, the West player put up a brilliant defense to set the declarer's three no-trump contract.

He made this play despite the fact that the declarer had bid his hand badly and not shown his major suit.

West, however, deduced that the declarer probably had some such holding as was actually the case and his play would not have lost anything, even with a slightly different holding.

South, Dealer.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♢	Pass	1 NT (1)	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	3 NT (2)	Pass
Pass	Pass

(1) A bad bid which made the defense difficult for East and West. Obviously, one spade is the correct response.

(2) An overbid despite the possession of five honor-tricks. South, with his barren distribution, should have been content to merely call two clubs.

East, not knowing his partner's hand, made the natural opening of the heart six. The Queen in dummy held the trick, and at Trick 2 a low spade was played from dummy.

At this point West made a brilliant play. Spades had not been bid and West did not see the North hand.

That player, however, unhesitatingly went up with the spade Queen. He did it on the assumption that the declarer in leading the suit in which dummy was short and at a notrump contract, obviously was trying to set up tricks in that suit.

With so many high cards in dummy, West realized it would be quite possible to shut declarer out of his own hand.

West went up with the spade Queen to force declarer's entry immediately and assist his partner make the proper hold-up play.

That play completely fixed declarer, who won with the Ace and led out the Jack. East, seeing the dummy held only one more card of the suit, won with the King.

North was no longer able to get back into his own hand to run his established spades and his contract was later defeated two tricks.

Had East not gone up with the spade Queen permitting North's ten to hold the first round of the suit, the contract still could have been defeated by East's holding up the King.

However, on this line of play declarer could have taken two tricks and held the set to one.

Flowers as Graduation Gift

By MRS. BEECKMAN

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

The girl with whom I have been keeping company is graduating from a nurses' training school. I wish you would please suggest a graduation gift that is both suitable and proper, and also not expensive.

Would it be proper to send flowers at this occasion, even if it is to be a smaller affair than a college graduation, and I shall not be present? What kind of flowers and how many?

CHARLES.

1—The most courtly and appropriate thing for a gentleman to send as a graduation present is a lovely corsage. Since most girls are devoted to gardenias, and since they are "becoming" to all girls, this is a safe as well as beautiful flower to choose for the corsage.

If they are large gardenias, three grouped downward make a perfect corsage, and the easy and comfortable to wear. And warn the florist not to combine greenery with them—only their own glistening and beautiful leaves. Also not too much ribbon and no tinseled ribbon.

"Mother, I'll pass things if you're ashamed of your hands—"

"AT my bridge party, even my daughter noticed how embarrassed I was over my red, rough hands.

"Later she said, 'Mother, maybe your hands would look as nice as Mrs. Nugent's if you used Lux for dishes. She says anybody can have nice hands by using Lux instead of harsh soaps.'

"It's true! Since I've changed to Lux for dishes, I'm proud of my hands! And a big box lasts more than a month for all the dishes."

LUX for dishes keeps hands young . . .

SAY, I CAN SKATE AS GOOD AS ANY BOY!

Experts on children's diets say that girls from six to nine need 5½ slices of bread a day, and girls from ten to fourteen need 7 slices daily.

IF YOU want your girl to be healthy and peppy, equal to anything, see that she gets her quota of Hathaway's Bread.

Hathaway's is generously full of rich, nourishing ingredients. It will do a lot to keep her weight up to standard and make her strong and husky.

You won't have to urge her. She's sure to like Hathaway's Bread because it has a tasty freshness which appeals to children. It's expertly baked, too, fine-textured and easy to digest. Baked twice daily and rushed fresh from our ovens, conveniently sliced.

THE CHART at the right above tells you how much your daughter should weigh. Give her her chance to be as sturdy as the other girls . . . see that she eats plenty of Hathaway's Bread every day!

HATHAWAY'S BREAD

ADVICE on LOVE by BEATRICE FAIRFAX and NELL BRINKLEY

Elaborate Weddings Often a Mistake

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

It is quite natural for a bride to feel that her wedding day is all-important, and that she must be featured at all costs — generally too much cost.

Elaborate trousseau, wedding reception, flowers, etc., are really quite unnecessary and often seriously cripple [illegible] resources.

How much better if the parents of the bride would have used the [illegible] for buying furniture and [illegible] out with the expenses of the first year of married life.

The argument in favor of showy weddings is often that the family [illegible] in a hole and [illegible] fashion. But compromises [illegible] be reached and a simple but [illegible] active ceremony devised.

A [illegible] the groom, there are very few [illegible] who take even the faintest interest in an elaborate wedding. It is a nightmare to them [illegible] So why only [illegible] Why not [illegible] of both? The day [illegible] be one that both [illegible] [illegible] entire lives.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I've been away from my girl, in a distant city, for about a year, and I've been writing to her regularly at least once a week. She writes back to me, but very seldom writes about anything I tell her in my letters. During the last six months I have asked her three times if she will marry me, and she has never replied.

At last I went to see her and [illegible] to know why she [illegible] of marriage [illegible] not even a [illegible] expert could make [illegible] letters and that instead [illegible] and having her [illegible] to practice writing [illegible] could be [illegible]

[illegible] with her I left [illegible] without another word. [illegible] thinking it over. Maybe she's right. I [illegible] be a better penman. What do you think of the sample [illegible] writing I am sending you? [illegible] want to get this girl back. How shall I do it?

AMBROSE C. J.

As long as you insist upon an opinion, my dear boy, here goes. [illegible] handwriting is pretty bad. [illegible] minutes for me to [illegible] letter and now [illegible] sure about some of [illegible]

[illegible] advice and try [illegible] man [illegible] the typewriter, [illegible] take you back. I [illegible]

[illegible] we are on this subject of [illegible] I wonder [illegible] some of the young people who write to this column don't [illegible] to write more plainly. Their handwriting has every evidence of haste and sometimes they write so faintly in pencil that it's impossible to make their letters out. A well written letter is the [illegible] production.

If you're dissatisfied with your handwriting, send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope and I will give you the name of a good handwriting manual.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I'm in love with a girl half my age and she wants to marry me only if my wife dies. My wife is sickly, and the girl knows it, so I bought this girl an engagement ring, and she promised to be mine only. She goes out with an old sweetheart, and when he calls her on the phone she acts as if she were obeying a code.

I've spent several hundred dollars on this girl in clothes and jewelry. She kisses me passionately whenever we meet, and she won't leave me alone. I love her so much I cannot really do my work. I have two sons over 21 years of age. J. A.

You evidently do not recognize the signs of a gold digger when you meet one. I haven't given a third of your letter, but enough, I hope, to show that this girl is working you for a good thing. A number of men have found themselves behind bars from dwelling on the idea they would marry some such little gold digger, if a wife in ill health died.

This girl is exploiting your age and weakness to get what she wants out of you. Please be sensible.

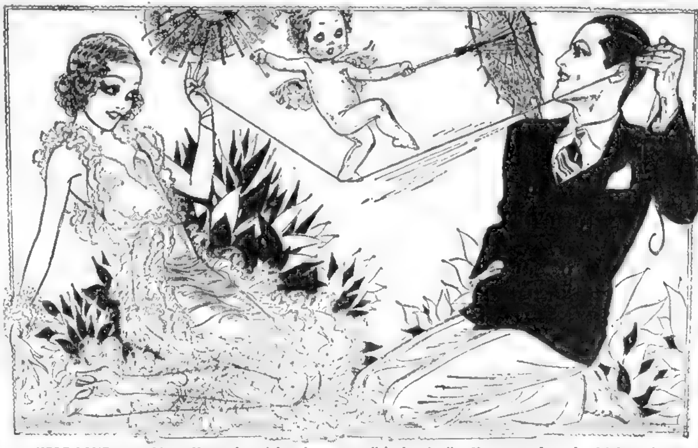
Gray Hair

Best Remedy is Made At Home

You can now make at home a better gray hair remedy than you can buy by following this simple recipe. To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small [illegible] and one fourth [illegible] Any druggist can put [illegible] at very [illegible] Apply to the hair twice a week until the [illegible] shade is obtained. [illegible] imparts color to streaked, faded or gray hair, making it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Careful, Boy!

By Nell Brinkley



HERE LOVE starts his walk on the tricky, dangerous "slack wire." He pretends to be frightened, but knows well that if he should fall, four hands would reach out to catch him. By and by, the hands that hold the string will come closer together, draw the string tight, and make Cupid's work much safer.

Still a little later, the small love god will be whispering into the young man's ear, "Go ahead, ask her," and hurrying over to the girl, he will be whispering into her ear, "Say YES." Then, nothing to do except select the place to live and fix the day.

This is a beautiful picture by Miss Brinkley, and with it goes my usual advice, GET MARRIED.

CHAPTER 290

I WAS SO astonished at Lillian's viciously uttered speech that for a second I could only gasp at her.

She caught my eye and grinned, her spleen dissolving, as it generally does once her temper has exploded.

"I know," she said, "it isn't on the cards to call a sweet young thing an anointed little liar. And at that, the epithet doesn't exactly fit her. She can't by any stretch of the imagination be called 'little'."

The grin which accompanied her words was infectious, and I found myself smiling broadly back at her. Hugh's lips twitched, but I had the uneasy impression that he did not wish to betray any amusement, and I wondered again if Lillian's patent dislike of Avis was arousing his championship of her.

"You evidently do not believe her story," he said quietly.

Lillian shot a keen, searching glance at him.

"Do you?" she asked.

He hesitated.

"It sounded plausible," he said at last.

Lillian's lips curled ever so slightly.

SHE SAW SAM BRIXTON!

"Yes, she's quite an artist in her line," she said. And there was an obduracy in her voice that betrayed her unwillingness to yield any part of the opinion she had formed.

I saw Hugh's lips close with the obstinacy of a man prejudiced by another's too palpable bias, and I spoke quickly.

"Do you mean, Lillian, that you think all of her story was a product of her imagination?"

"No, I don't go that far," Lillian retorted, "for the simple reason that I don't think she's clever enough to invent a fantastic yarn like that out of the whole cloth. No doubt she saw a man come up to the window and listen, but she didn't hear or see him come up a ladder. She saw Sam Brixton coming out of that window. That's what she saw."

"But," Hugh's voice was puzzled, "what reason would she have for concealing the fact that it was Brixton she saw? He is the merest acquaintance of hers. There is no reason at all for her to shield him."

"You are right. She had no reason. But, mark my word, she shielded him, just the same."

Her obstinate voice reminded me irresistibly of the old proverb, "a woman convinced against her will is of the same opinion still."

"I can think of a dozen different motives which might actuate that lady," she went on. "Sam may have had a chance to promise her a reward for keeping quiet. And she's a greedy thing, with not a shred of scruple about her. Even if he didn't see her, she might be delicately toying with the notion of possible polite blackmail later on, or—she may simply be indulging her dislike of you, Madge, by keeping quiet upon something it is important for you to know."

"Do you mean," he said slowly, "that Miss Avis dislikes Madge, and would try to injure her?"

HATRED OF MADGE

"Does she dislike Madge?" she repeated. "My boy, 'dislike' is a feeble word,' if you remember your old temperance poems. The young woman has been brought up discreetly, and she has a very lively regard for the probable consequences of slipping arsenic in the coffee of your hostess. Otherwise, we'd be ordering floral harps and gates ajar for our Madgie about now, instead of chinning over the possible trick the fair Avis has played us about Sam Brixton."

Some Tips on Baby Food

MARCH OF EVENTS in baby foods—the homogenization of solid foods—that is, vegetables, fruits and cereals are made as smooth as milk. The Food cells are broken up into tiny particles which make it easier for the baby to digest. These [illegible] have the [illegible] necessary to [illegible] but the fibers are [illegible] that they cannot irritate delicate tissues. They are combined to give a scientific blend of vegetable nourishment. For example, No. 1 contains beans, beets, asparagus tips; No. 2 contains string beans, pumpkin and tomatoes; No. 3 contains carrots, spinach and peas. Be sure to investigate this new baby food. Sell at 2 [illegible] for 25c.

A NEW THERMO jug which has many uses at present and will be a necessity during the picnicking months, will keep hot foods hot and cold foods cold. The foods are not placed directly in the jar but are placed in their own container. Large enough to hold a quart of milk, a [illegible] carton of ice cream [illegible] tea or coffee. Jug sells [illegible] are priced [illegible]

AN ASH TRAY in green or red, opens at the bottom to conceal the [illegible] homes. Comes in red and green. On sale at a near-by store for 50c, usually $1.

HAVE NO FEAR of the empty cookie jar, for it is easily replenished. A chain store is now featuring their own brand of home-made cookies. Included among the varieties are the popular butterscotch cookies; the fruit cookies, full of healthful raisins and nuts; chocolate cookies and rich, golden cream. Sell for 2 lbs. for 25c.

FISH DINNERS are [illegible] of many days during this season. We prepared a number of delicious dishes at our cooking classes last week—inexpensive and well balanced meals. Stuffed haddock, broiled mackerel, fish fillets and a delicious fish pie, with the accompanying vegetables and desserts. Send a 3c stamp for this lesson sheet.

A TINY FLASH light is not much larger than a lipstick and can be carried very conveniently in the pocket for emergency purposes. The advantage of this particular flash light is that the battery is of standard make and can be replaced for 5c, a new bulb can be had for 10c. The light itself is 25.

ALTHOUGH WE THINK of chutney as an English relish, we have adopted it wholeheartedly as the ideal accompaniment to serve with meat, rice dishes, appetizers, etc. Usually imported from England, there is now available a [illegible] brand of chutney which sells at 25c for a 12-oz. jar.

AND NOW WE HAVE individual wooden salad bowls. Make a most attractive addition for the buffet supper table, or the company dinner table. Of a smooth finished natural wood, they blend in with the colorful ingredients which are served in them, to make a [illegible] ful note. 50c each.

ONE OF THE BEST clam chowders [illegible] we have [illegible] on sale. Made up of clams, potatoes, onions, salt pork [illegible] This [illegible] chowder [illegible] Maine and is packaged [illegible] for 45c.

A NEAR-BY FOOD [illegible] enlarged its department for specialized foods for dietetic requirements. They do not prescribe foods (which is a physician's [illegible]) but they have a complete knowledge of the different products which help the person who is confused about what foods are best. They have arranged a dietetic assortment [illegible] of different health foods, including toasted gluten bread, casein lady fingers, sugarless [illegible] starch-free bran wafers, [illegible] late dessert, bread sticks, cookies, cocoa.

DO NOT FORGET to send your name and address, for information on where to purchase the above items. Also a loose 3c stamp for prompt reply. Or telephone Martha Lee, at LIberty 4000.

Faithfully yours,

MARTHA LEE.

BATTLES Bog To Save SISTER

BOY, 8, RESCUES 5-YEAR-OLD

Joan Herendeen, 5, of Braintree, was alive today because her brother, Larry, 8, wouldn't give up.

She was playing with several other children on the mushy spring ice which had formed over a pocket of mud six feet deep formed at the foot of a hill.

Suddenly the ice gave and she plunged up to her waist in the boggy water beneath. She screamed and struggled, and rapidly worked deeper into the mud.

Larry heard her and raced to help, although his own weight on the ice made it almost certain that he would plunge into the [illegible] beside her.

Slowly he pulled her toward the bank.

When his father, Lloyd Herendeen, summoned by their playmates, came running to the scene, Larry and Joan lay panting, but safe, on firm ground.

Both children were kept in bed in their home, 143 Elm [illegible], today, suffering from shock, frayed nerves and immersion.

TAGUE Leads in Boston P. O. RACE

By Associated Press

Washington, March 12—As the closing hour for applications for the Boston postmastership neared, Peter F. Tague was the only strongly endorsed candidate whose papers had been filed with the civil service commission.

The application reported to have been made by Charles H. Cole, unsuccessful candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, had not been recorded but was believed on the way.

The 11 applicants reported were: Eugene B. Hamilton, Arthur A. Werner, Bernard J. Parker, Clyde G. Coburn, George A. MacDonald, James H. Brennan, Howard V. Foulke, Arthur J. Conlin, Peter F. Tague, Francis A. Pentoney and Lucerne S. Cowles.

The order for an examination was interpreted here as precluding the possibility of William E. Hurley, incumbent and a Republican career man strongly backed by Senator Walsh, as well as shutting off chances of other aspiring career men in the Boston office. However, friends of Senator Walsh and Coolidge pointed out there was nothing to prevent the President from ignoring the civil service list if he chose.

The postmastership continued to be a potential test of strength between Governor Curley, backing Tague, and Senator Walsh, supporting first, Hurley, and second, according to his friends, any candidate save Curley's.

WOMAN MISSING On Sound Liner

Providence, March 12—A woman who registered as M. Meade [illegible] of New York was missing today when the Concord of the Colonial Navigation Company docked here from New York.

Ship officers and the woman went to her stateroom when she boarded the ship and was not seen again.

She was described as red haired, 5 feet 6 inches tall and about 40 years old. A handbag containing $15 and toilet articles was found in the stateroom.

Boston Firm Sues Bankers for Millions

Charges of a huge stock sales fraud and conspiracy by 36 Louisiana bankers and business executives were made today in a suit for $7,520,230.18 brought by the former Boston firm of Curtis & Sanger.

The suit was filed in federal court at Shreveport, La., and among those named were Rudolf S. Hecht, president of the American Bankers Association and A. D. Geoghegan, chairman of the board of the Wesson Oil Co.

Curtis & Sanger, one of Boston's oldest and most reliable banking and brokerage houses, was forced into bankruptcy in October, 1931. It had been founded here in 1889.

The list of defendants also includes the names of leaders in business and banking circles of Louisiana, all of whom were directors of the defunct Insurance Securities, Inc., or their heirs.

Setting out in the petition that the scheme forced them off the New York and Boston Stock Exchanges and then into bankruptcy, Curtis and Sanger ask three million dollars for this loss of prestige, two million dollars from direct loss from purchase of stock and two million dollars for exemplary damages.

Curtis & Sanger was a voluntary partnership and with the exception of [illegible] P. Sanger of Brookline, a special partner, all full partners were liable to the extent of their own private fortunes in paying the firm's debts.

When bankruptcy schedules were filed here in December, 1931, the liabilities were $6,333,607, and assets, $5,860,063. The latter figure represented mostly stocks, negotiable bonds and securities.

MERRIAM, HOUSE Back Townsend

Sacramento, Cal., March 12 (AP)—Governor Frank F. Merriam and the lower House of the State Legislature were definitely on record today as favoring the revolving fund old age pension plan proposed by Dr. F. E. Townsend.

The Governor's shift yesterday to an unqualified endorsement of the plan, including its $200 a month pension clause, caused momentary confusion among the legislators. Hastily administration forces caucused, and, despite murmurs of dissent, agreed to "go along" with the chief executive.

HUNGRY Quit Siege Under GAS THREAT

By Associated Press

McAlester, Okla., March 12—The hungry group of miners and farmers who have camped in the courthouse here for four days to await food, clothing and jobs evacuated the building at 6 a. m. today upon an ultimatum from the sheriff to leave or face tear gas bombs.

More than 200 men, women and children who last night refused to leave, offered no resistance early today when told that unless they left within an hour the building would be gassed.

Sheriff Sneed gave leaders his personal check for $100 to purchase food. Mayor Bryan Burton of Krebs, home of many of the hunger marchers, who gave them $10 to buy food yesterday, told them they could come to the Krebs city hall to cook their food.

Meanwhile two truckloads of food, offered as the personal gift of Governor E. W. Marland but rejected by the throng, were held here awaiting further orders.

Gabriel Robbed of Trumpet

By Universal Service

New York, March 12—When Gabriel is robbed of his trumpet, that's news.

It happened in Harlem, where Gabriel, known in earthly circles as trumpeter Isaac Worth, hastened from Father Divine's personally supervised Heaven after a hard night's work.

Hardly had he tucked his resplendent silver and gold trimmed trumpet under his arm and turned his steps homeward before two of satan's emissaries fell upon him, tore the trumpet from his clasp and hocked it at the nearest pawnshop for $5.

Cecil O'Loughlin and Gilbert Fernandez, both 17 and colored, were arrested and locked up, and the trumpet was restored to the panting Gabriel, who tootled as usual in Father Divine's Negro heaven tonight.

PINCH HITTING FOR AUSTEN LAKE

Although every man on the squad is carrying at least one memento of the Toronto or Detroit games, the Bruins are primed for the New York Americans tonight at the Garden . . . The Patricians were a tired but happy group as they detrained at the Huntington Avenue station.

Bill Grimes

Eddie Shore and Babe Siebert absorbed plenty of punishment during the Maple Leaf and Red Wing conflicts, but as the club chalked up two victories, they had no complaints to offer . . . Punishment is simply part of a day's work with this pair . . . Due to the fact that Eddie and Babe have been carrying more than their share of the defensive assignments all season, Manager Frank Patrick is anxious to clinch the American Division championship as soon as possible in order to give them a rest

Dit Clapper, Max Kaminsky and Marty Barry could stand a lay-off, too, for this st-line trio has been in the thick of all recent battles.

Realizing that the Amerks have nothing to lose and everything to gain Patrick will give his Bruins a serious fight talk before they take the ice tonight at the Garden . . Over a period of years the Americans have given the Bruins as much trouble as any club in the National Hockey League . . . Roy "Shrimp" Worters, the Amerk goalie, has been "hexing" the Bruins for years and hopes to wave his magic wand effectively tonight.

Why All the Fuss About Mellilo?

I have never been able to understand the cause for all the furore concerning the Red Sox failure to purchase Oscar Mellilo from the St. Louis Browns . . . If the Brown second sacker, whom so many believe to be the class of the league, had not been a consistent .325 hitter in that small Sportsman's Park, he wouldn't hit for the size of his hat, playing 77 games at Fenway Park . . Moreover Mellilo is far from being a youngster. If I had my say, I wouldn't trade him even for Max Bishop, if the reports are true concerning the form the present Red Sox keystone sacker is displaying at Sarasota . .

NEVER PLAYED BETTER THAN AT PRESENT

By Bill Grimes

Striving to solidify their hold on first place, the Bruins will tear after the New York Americans from the opening face-off tonight at the Boston Garden.

With only four games to play, the B's top the American division by three points, as a result of the four points they annexed by beating Toronto and Detroit on their last road trip.

Although the Chicago Blackhawks, who are in the runner up position, are idle tonight, the third place Rangers are in action at home battling Les Canadiens.

The Bruins are playing the best hockey they have shown all season. They have been through no less than eight games without suffering a defeat.

Such a streak is a feat at any stage of an N. H. L. race, but it is particularly noteworthy when accomplished in the home stretch

Although the Maple Leaf and Red Wing games were strenuous battles from start to finish, the Patricians arrived home with but two minor injuries, Jerry Shannon with a lame instep and Bert McInenly, with a slightly wrenched shoulder

For more than three weeks the Bruins have been fighting against the strongest opposition in the Calder loop. Without an exception, the games have been hard fought. As a result, the players are tired and looking forward to the time when they will be able to ease up.

They need two games to cinch the American Division titles and are confident of being awarded at least the odd point in the home and home series with the Amerks.

Once they get by the Americans the Bruins will be set for the Chicago Blackhawks, who are scheduled to make their final appearance here on Saturday.

MAX SCHMELING is certain to get the title bout with Max Baer as a result of his smashing nine-round knockout of Steve Hamas at Hamburg, Germany.

Baer is [illegible] over the result of the [illegible] Hamas [illegible]. It has furnished him with an opponent who will draw a $100,000 gate. [illegible]

"Hamas could have had the title match in June if he hadn't boxed Schmeling," says Baer. [illegible] would have been a [illegible] champion. Max would [illegible] out the former Penn State [illegible] in three or four rounds.

Hamas is [illegible] takes [illegible] a tremendous [illegible].

MAY WEAR REDS' LIVERY

By Associated Press

Lakeland, Fla.—Goose Goslin, the pace-setter for the rookies of the Detroit Tigers, had a new record today that leaves the rookies cold. The Goose smashed three successive foul drives through as many automobile windshields.

Tampa, Fla.—A hint that Sunny Jim Bottomley will go to the Chicago Cubs, by the trade route, was heard in the Cincinnati Reds' camp today, as the probability arose that Johnny Mize would be the only regular first baseman carried by the team.

Charlie Grimm, manager-first sacker of the Cubs, was quoted as advising Chuck Dressen, Reds' pilot, recently, that he would be unable to go through the entire season.

New Orleans—Bill Knickerbocker, shortstop for the Cleveland Indians, who has been in bed with a heavy cold, was ready for light work again today.

In Knickerbocker's absence Roy Hughes, young utility man, has been handling the shortstop duties.

Avalon, Calif.—Chicago Cub hurlers let out another notch today in anticipation of some serious pitching against the Pittsburgh Pirates and Chicago White Sox this week end.

Manager Charlie Grimm has not decided on the order in which the pitchers will work, other than that Larry French, former Pirate, will throw against his old teammates.

Pasadena, Calif.—Zeke Bonura, who hit 27 home runs for the Chicago White Sox last season, has a fight ahead of him for the regular first base job.

Manager Jimmy Dykes says he intends to give Glen Wright as much work at the post during the exhibition game series as Bonura gets. The more impressive player will start the season in the regular lineup.

Miami Beach, Fla.—The St. Louis Browns, flushed with their 3 to 2 victory over the New York Giants yesterday, are all set to attempt [illegible] today.

Manager Rogers Hornsby was particularly pleased at the [illegible] shown by his pitchers, Andrews, Weiland and Coffman.

West Palm Beach, Fla.—Youngsters who are eager to make good are going to get their chance in the St. Louis Cardinals' spring exhibition games.

Manager Frankie Frisch has said he would try his players to use every player possible in each game with preference going to newcomers. The Cards' first exhibition game of the season will be this afternoon against the Phillies, with Dizzy Dean scheduled to pitch the first three innings.

Biloxi, Miss.—Manager Bucky Harris at last has a chance to see his 1935 model Washington Senator infield at work.

Kindly winds dried the rain-soaked diamond and Harris yesterday put them through a fast fielding drill with Travis at third, Lary at short, Myer at second and Kuhel at first. He [illegible] the inner defense as it whipped the ball around making frequent shadow double plays.

Orlando, Fla.—Emil Leonard, an outstanding flinger for the Brooklyn Dodgers last season, has added a new pitch to his repertoire. It's a screwball, especially effective against left-handed batsmen.

Pitching for the Yanigans yesterday, Dutch had the varsity baffled. The regulars made only three hits and one unearned run off him in five frames.

Miami Beach, Fla.—The New York Giants during the winter obtained Leon Chagnon and Allyn Stout for relief pitching duty, but don't bet any serious dough that old Adolfo Luque won't be in there frequently.

The camp is still talking about Luque's performance Sunday against the Athletics when he shut them out without a hit the last three innings.

Winter Haven, Fla.—Manager Jimmy Wilson and his Phillies leave today for Bradentown, hoping to blank the world's champion St. Louis Cardinals in their opening game of the Grapefruit League series tomorrow.

Fort Myers, Fla.—The Athletics' training camp slid into a new period of activity today, with Bob Johnson and his bandaged wrist occupying a good share of interest.

Johnson, whose wrist was cut by glass during the winter, was responsible for the run which yesterday saved the Yanigans from being blanked in a 6-inning game. The game was a 3 to 1 victory for the regulars.

Versatile Mat Star Auto Champ

Eddie Fizear, who meets Jim Wallis in a preliminary of Alex MacLean's wrestling show tomorrow night at the Arena, is regarded as the auto racing champion of dirt tracks in the U. S.

The Great Dane" has one ambition—to roar over the sands of Daytona Beach at more than 300 miles an hour in his own car and shatter Sir Malcolm Campbell's record.

Wrestling is an avocation with him—a sideline with enough action and thumps to keep him in trim until the spring when he'll don the goggles again.

Promoters admit that if he stayed with wrestling he'd be a top-notcher.

Huskies Revise Schedule

Five changes in the 1935 Husky baseball schedule were announced today by Edsworth Dodin, varsity manager.

A tilt with Panzar at Newark, N. J., has been canceled. American International College of Springfield will play at Huntington field May 6 instead of May 14.

Rhode Island State has been shifted to May 27 from May 25, so that Bates, an addition to the former slate, can be met at Lewiston, Maine.

Another game has been added with Lowell Textile at Lowell on June 1.

The revised schedule: April 10, at Brown; 13, at R. I.; 16, B. C.; 25, Lowell Tex.; 30, Clark; May 2, at N. H.; 4, Upsala; 6, Am. International; 15, at B. C.; 18, Worcester Tech; 25, at Bates; 27, R. I.; June 1, at Lowell Tex.

ROWE, WALKER Sign Contracts

Lakeland, Fla., March 12 (INS)—The last Detroit Tiger was safely in the fold today with the announcement by Owner Frank J. Navin that Lynwood (Schoolboy) Rowe signed his contract last night. The Tiger owner refused to reveal the sum his star pitcher will receive, but it was believed to be around $9000. Rowe had previously rejected a contract calling for $8500.

Gerald Walker, "bad boy" outfielder, was also signed yesterday, completing the Tiger roster.

POINTING FOR Y. M. H. A.

By Bob Ahearn

Charlie Meirick, basketball coach at the West End House, announced today that from now until Saturday's big game with the Boston Y. M. H. A., all visitors will be barred from the House quintet's practice session.

Several new plays have been given the squad this week, and Meirick doesn't want to take any chance of having them leak out.

The big gun in the West End five's scoring attack is Johnny Crowley, pivot. Crowley, a resident of Charlestown, was the only Irish representative in either club's line-up in their first meeting.

But his presence was keenly felt by the chargers of Johnny Fox out at the Boston Y. M. H. A. In the closing minutes of play Crowley shot the deciding basket to give the House team a 27-25 victory.

Meirick will pick his starting lineup from Al Baker, Charlie Bird, Crowley, Art Gerson, Sid Rudman, Irv Nelman, Buddo Greenberg, Jack Richmond, and Flo Cubell.

Preliminary to the big fray, the West End and Boston Y. M. H. A. jayvees will square off. Dancing will follow the double [illegible].

Eight colorful school basketball teams were named today for the New England Catholic High School Tournament to be staged Friday and Saturday in the Somerville High gym.

Mission of Roxbury, Catholic League champs, and St. Mary's of Lynn, runner-up. Mission, in the league, Sacred Heart of Worcester and St. Michael's of Northampton are Massachusetts teams competing. St. Michael's is defending champion.

Other teams: Cathedral High, Manchester, N. H.; Cheverus High, Portland, Me.; La Salle Academy, Providence, R. I., and Cathedral High of Burlington, Vt.

St. Michael's, coached by Don Sullivan, will be the favorite. Three of last year's champions are back. The team lost only three games this winter while winning 20 against strong competition.

However there isn't a weak [illegible] in the entry list and the games will furnish some of the most exciting court action of this year.

Reverend George M. Dowd, director of the Catholic League, also announced the All-League team today. It includes John Gatey, St. Mary's in Lynn and Paul Cuddyer, Cathedral, forwards; McReed, Mission, center; Nick Horrigan, Cathedral, and Anthony Kozlowski, Lynn St. Mary's, guards; Paul Morris, St. Mary's, Brookline, utility.

500 Tickets to Be Awarded Ruth Identity Winners

THREE SIMPLE RULES COVER CONTEST

By Bill Connell

The field of thousands of fans swept into the second lap of the 20-day race in the Ruth-Braves Identity Test today, with the second partially masked picture of a Warrior appearing in these columns for identification.

With awards of 250 pairs of free tickets for the Braves opener at the Wigwam on April 16 against the Giants to attract fans, the contest already has assumed large proportions.

Only three rules govern the test, making it possible for anyone old or young, to try for a pair of free seats. The rules are:

No. 1—Identify a partially masked picture of a Braves player, starting today, each weekday for 20 days. The second picture appears in these pages today. Print name of player, position, and whether he bats and throws right or left-handed, on form printed with picture. Save these identified pictures until the 20th has appeared.

No. 2—Write a letter of 50 words or less on the topic, "What Babe Ruth Will Do for the Braves."

MIZE RUTH

Can't you hear Babe creak as he lumbers back to first? Every move not only a picture but a pain. Danny MacFayden tries to catch his old teammate off first in exhibition game between the Reds and Braves. Note how easy the Babe plays it. Taking no chances of straining leg while sliding.

Babe Tutors Brown

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 12—Babe Ruth knows who Bobby Brown is now.

So much so that the Hull lad is getting special attention from the Bambino on the art of pitching.

Bobby opened the week by hitting ten minutes at top speed. Despite the fact that he pitched three innings yesterday at the Ruth School . . .

The Bam harped on the "old follow through as Bobby labored.

"Forget your arm, kid," bellowed Babe. "Just be natural and give that ball all you've got.

"Don't mind if you're wild. It's good to keep those guys loose up there."

Babe again disturbed the elbow he pulled at Tampa and took things easy.

Frank Hogan, returned to the wars for the first time since he was injured by Ruth in practice last week.

Joe Cascarart was used at second base during the infield drill. "Just for protection," McKechnie said.

Fort Myers, Fla., March 12—Colonel Cornelius McGillicuddy directed the Athletics today.

Governor Ruby Laffoon of Kentucky was a visitor at the A's camp and conferred the commission on the A's tall tactician.

Danno Meets Joe Dusek

Albany, March 12—Dan O'Mahoney, Irish heavyweight wrestling champion, will try to continue his general run of victories when he crosses with Joe Dusek here tonight.

Danno has outside Boston Ernie and Rudy Dusek, and now believes he will defeat the . . .

Freshmen Training

Dinny Mac to See That Eaglets Learn

By John R. McNamara

As Told to Walter Kiley

Freshman teams are too often neglected in college. It has become a habit to use them as trial horses for the varsity team to scrimmage against. While I am head coach at Boston College I intend that our freshman teams be coached by competent assistants . . . Who will be imparting the same system of plays as employed by the varsity . . . So that when a player comes up in his sophomore year he will be able to pick right up without any loss of the all too short time at our disposal.

I want my teams to be well versed in the fundamentals . . . And the learning process must start in the spring.

Take boys like Johnny Freitas, Tom Blake and Bobby Ott of the Boston College team of two years ago . . . Bob Curran, Henry Ohrenberger and Paul Donohoe of last year's team . . . Every one of them had great possibilities from his sophomore year . . . Yet it took them a year or two to get into the swing of the methods used by Joe McKenney with the varsity . . . And just when they reached their maximum efficiency they were lost through graduation.

Correct position of feet and hands is absolutely essential for a lineman . . . He must know how to distribute his weight evenly . . . How to swing out of line . . . And how to team with his side partner on turning a rival either inside or outside as the occasion warrants . . .

The backs must learn how to run their plays to a certain spot . . . The interference must be forced to keep their feet when blocking, always driving forward instead of leaving their feet when trying to a man . . . Pass receivers must be trained to follow in lines and thin passers to point their feet in the direction they are throwing.

These are only a few of the more important fundamentals which take infinite care and patience to impart.

With Bill Ormsby as first baseman and coach as tactician in the outfield, returning to handle the backfield and an equally fine line coach and head freshman coach to be named very shortly, I feel certain that there will be no excuse for any Boston College player to fail down on his assignment or to err through ignorance of the fundamental principles.

In closing let me say that I am most happy to be head coach at Boston College. I want nothing more than to be successful there. If at the end of our two-year contract, the authorities are fit to renew it, I will be content.

To me the Eastern football conference is not a stepping stone to any larger opportunity. My interest has been in Boston College football since I first entered there . . . If I am there 10 years hence so much the better.

(Conclusion).

Plunging Toward Death

The Tale of a Narrow Squeak on a High Mountain Near Cliff's Edge

By FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO EVERYBODY:

Here's a yarn, fellow adventurers, that socks me right smack in the weakest spot I've got. You know, I am not afraid of mice, and I don't go around nights looking under beds for burglars. Some day I might even get used to being shot at or torpedoed, or chewed up by man eating kangaroos. But height—altitude—elevation—anything more than two inches off good, flat, solid ground—just about scares me to death.

FLOYD GIBBONS

As a rule, I manage things so that my old phobia of mine doesn't bother me very much. I ride in the subways, . . . from tall buildings, and shut my eyes whenever I see a telephone lineman start to shinny up one of those big poles. But today, reading a yarn from Adventurer Eric K. Frank, of 115 Grand avenue, Palisades Park, N. J., I got a dose of altitude fever I couldn't very well avoid.

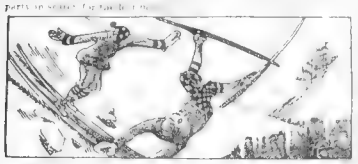
You guessed it, Joe. It's . . . I was reading Eric's letter and I was . . . writing about.

It was quite a few miles away from here, boys and girls, and quite a few years back. The episode that is scaring the pants off of me today happened on Winsel-Burg Mountain in South Germany in the year 1925. Then, Eric Frank was one of a party of hardy souls who had gone out with a guide for a skiing jaunt on the treacherous slopes of the Winsel-Burg.

They had been climbing steadily for about four hours, clambering up steep paths, edging their precarious way along narrow, ice-covered ledges, skirting treacherous cliffs and dodging dangerous pitfalls. Finally they came out on a broad slope covered with hard-packed January snow, whose vast, glistening expanse reared itself high up the mountainside, and here the leader called a halt.

The knapsacks were opened. The leader . . . of the party had started . . . when the guide remembered . . . necessary in those . . . were people apt . . . fall down cliffs and get stuck . . . the people in his . . . counted the . . . pale and his . . . man.

. . . heard it . . . know exactly . . . mountains. . . . the hotel . . . and . . . parts of . . .



For two hours they hunted, doubling back on their own tracks trying to find the place where he had left the party. Finally, they spied him—a rapidly-moving speck, far off to the left—a man on skis darting at express-train speed down the . . . of the mountain. It was a sight that should have brought joy to that anxious little party of searchers, but it only filled them with a new and awful fear. Unfamiliar with the country, the man on skis was riding straight to his destruction. The slope he was careening down so mercilessly ended in a steep, towering cliff. If he wasn't stopped before he got to the . . . he would be dashed to pieces on the ice-covered rocks below.

Eric . . . grades . . . his friends . . . him in . . . hear . . . a dog . . . nearing . . .!"

The . . . He'd need . . . save the . . . him, knew . . . resistance—using every bit of strength and skill that was in him.

He was careening along now at forty miles an hour, the rush of cold air in his . . . crouched low . . . —forty . . . mile from . . . to halt. . . . to!

Eric yelled . . . You must keep the words from his mouth and carried . . . to the mountainside. He tried making motions again, but . . . skis . . . going fifty miles an hour. The edge of the cliff was only two hundred yards away, now. There was no chance left and Eric took it. He whipped up his speed, passed his rival and flung himself headlong in his path.

There was no . . . It could . . . slowed down . . . he got up again—saw . . . turned white as the snow . . . carried him to safety.

And after that, boys and girls, came one of the briefest conversations on record. The lad Eric had saved stood up looked . . . at the gaping descent before . . . and . . . didn't say anything.

Tomorrow a new sort of thriller. It's about a battle with an armed maniac—you'll want to read it.

Los Angeles, March 12—Ernst Lubitsch has always had a penchant for uniforms. He kept Maurice Chevalier dressed to the teeth in this style of clothes until Chevalier begged for his straw hat. Mary Garden Triumphs in Recital

By ANN AMES

At the Copley-Plaza last evening, Mary Garden, long one of the most colorful figures in the operatic world, gave a recital and lecture of the works of the great and late Claude Debussy.

Under the auspices of Aaron Richmond who has had the distinction of presenting some of the outstanding musical events of the Boston season Miss Garden sang some of the songs of Debussy, and talked of the man, his genius and his personality.

Seldom has the glamour of a personality projected itself more vividly. Miss Garden frankly and charmingly admits that she has passed the half century mark. Yet she sang Lia's Air, "Je Tremble e Voyant Visage," "Green," "La Chevelure," and "Mandoline" in voice as rich and colorful as youth itself with interpretation that is unsurpassed with sympathy and with the restraint that comes only with assurance.

It was Miss Garden alone who created the mood for Debussy. She expressed herself as wishing to acquaint the audience with the man and his work. She talked of him intimately, of his first wife Lilly whom he deserted, of his decision to set to music Maeterlinck's "Pelleas et Melisande" and of the inevitable squabbling that resulted when the monster Maeterlinck decided that neither Debussy's music nor Miss Garden's interpretation of the role were in accord with his inspiration.

Preceding her songs and her comment Frederick Bristol played several Debussy numbers and as interpreters of the [illegible] French master go, played [illegible] extremely well.

[illegible] not until the piano is Miss Garden had brought the audience a portrait of the man, with song and story [illegible] spirit of the genius as [illegible] except in her own exposition.

Mr. Bristol's playing of the lovely "Claire De Lune" which concluded the program, was superb.

Strikingly gowned as she would be in black sequins and [illegible] the ineffable charm which Miss Garden alone of the Golden Age of music commands today made last evening's recital one of the most memorable musical events of the season.

[illegible] according to her astute [illegible] Garden comes once and perhaps twice in a century. The audience which assembled at the Copley-Plaza last evening may count itself fortunate to know just what she means.

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA

LAWRENCE SHAW NATIONAL DIRECTOR

DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE YOUTH OF THE AMERICAS IN AVIATION

Junior Birdmen, who have non-member ballots filled out, are urged to send them into wing headquarters, 100 Summer st., so that all votes may be counted and the latest returns published.

The national Popular Pilot Poll is still going strong with Lindbergh, Wiley Post, Turner, Amelia Earhart and Rickenbacker leading the way in New England.

It is too early to predict a winner, too early to even say that the winner may be among the pilots named above. It may be Hawks, Byrd or some other aviator who may come through as a "dark horse."

If you are a member cast your ballot now, using the vote on this page. Non-member ballots, for the use of your friends, can be obtained by writing in your address on the members' ballot.

Every boy and girl between 10 and 21 years old, including Canadians, is entitled to one vote but only one vote in this huge poll of American youth. Take your vote seriously. Vote for the pilot you like the best, the one you think has done most to advance the cause of aviation.

UNIT BUILDING Real Airplane

SQUADRON 18

The "Captain Edson" unit of East Boston, Commander, Frank DeRosa. Banner points, 1,000.

Secretary Patsy Romano called the meeting to order. Planes, aviation magazines and famous pilots were discussed. It was decided to visit East Boston airport to see the new Fairchild Fokkers under command of Captain Albert LaVerdiere. Overnight hike was proposed for an absentee, unless he has provided a good excuse. The group is getting active with non-member ballots in the Popular Pilot Poll.

SQUADRON NO. 322

"Three Star," of Somerville, Commander, Guido Novello. Banner points, 4.

The building of a Pilgrim Air Camper has become a squadron prospect. The squadron is to meet once a week for social and business affairs and once a week for the construction of the airplane. Scout models will also be built. Four members drew scrapbooks on aviation besides the one kept by the group as a whole.

SQUADRON 219

Commander, Roger Smith; captain, Richard Hern, and sergeant-at-arms, Edward Dwyer.

Under direction of Arthur Gonsalves, the sponsor, an R. O. G. flying contest was held at Woburn High school gym and won by the following: First, D. Fox; second, L. Gonsalves; third, R. Hern; fourth, E. Dwyer; fifth, R. Bradley, and sixth, D. Hern. The winner's time was 39½ seconds. Judges were A. Gonsalves, A. DeAngelis, R. Smith and J. H. Gonsalves. Prizes were given the winners.

LONDON Mart Awaits ARMS DEBATE

(Copyright, 1935, by Universal Service)

London, March 12—The Stock Exchange today started the fortnightly account listlessly, awaiting the outcome of the arms debate in the House of Commons also the currency situation, the outlook for which was evidently worrying the continent.

The more Belgium and France reiterate their adherence to the gold standard, the more the public is reminded of similar British protestations in 1931.

British government bonds were fractionally lower. Germans rallied.

Aviation stocks were strong, but other industrials were dull. Nickels were bid on the strength of the bullish annual report and hopes for an international agreement.

There were rises of 10½ pence in gold and a farthing in silver but rubber was weak. After-hour traders were sympathetic to the United States cotton flurry.

The Burma Corporation is returning capital of 18 pence per share.

KENDALL CO. Earns $515,967

The Kendall company and subsidiaries (cotton textiles, surgical dressings and allied products) for the year ended December 29, 1934, report net profit of $515,967, compared with $955,884 in the previous year.

Dividends on preferred shares series A and participating dividends on the preferred were $214,255 and $13,120, respectively.

Consolidated balance sheet as of December 29, 1934, shows current assets of $8,961,110 and current liabilities of $3,099,041, a ratio of 2.8 to 1.

TEXTILES Continue Active

The current issue of the "Textile Organon" published by the Tubize Chatillon Corporation states that activity in the textile industry, which resulted in the establishment of a new peak during the first month of the year is believed to have continued into February.

The publication says it is believed that the spring peak of business will be reached this month.

Mandel Loss

Mandel Bros., Inc., reports for fiscal year ended Jan. 31, 1935, certified by independent auditors, net loss of $297,109 after taxes, depreciation and other charges.

BANKS ALARMED BY ECCLES' PLANS

FEAR BUREAUCRATIC RULE

By B. C. FORBES

Marriner S. Eccles, the Middle-Westerner recently picked by President Roosevelt as governor of the Federal Reserve Board, is proving a veritable brain truster, bubbling over with eagerness to turn things upside down.

He urges "distribution" of money in a way which must amuse Huey Long. Eccles champions subjecting our whole Federal Reserve System to political, to bureaucratic manipulation.

He has no patience with the ideas cherished by the founders of the nation. Washington should be all-powerful; states impotent.

B. C. Forbes

Under such a revolutionary set-up as Eccles urges, our banking system would become the pliant tool of politicians.

A Huey Long in the White House, for example, could issue unlimited amounts of bonds and force the Reserve banks to absorb them.

He would be their boss.

Haven't we had enough banking legislation for the present? Is not the claim constantly made by Washington that the banks of the country are today in the soundest condition ever, with depositors thoroughly protected against loss?

Surely, Washington has already bitten off all that it can chew. And, remember, it plans to bite off a great deal more in other (non-banking) directions.

All past history has demonstrated that whenever a ruler or a political body could lay their hands easily on money the temptation proved overwhelming to spend with prodigality, leading often to financial and social ruin.

Has not the time come to make it less easy, not more easy, for our own politicians at Washington to lay their hands on unlimited billions of dollars, all of which must be paid for some bad day?

The income tax pink slip, I properly colored. Congress should publish this latest attempted snooping, this latest maneuver to stir up class hatred and to single out shining targets for racketeers, kidnapers and every other species of criminal.

Publication of the information it calls for could serve no compensatory purpose.

Great is the official rejoicing over the reappearance of bond issuing by corporations.

Thanks should not go to framers and passers of the securities act, but to the practical, experienced man chosen by President Roosevelt to administer it, Joseph P. Kennedy. His whole concern has been to overcome grave faults of the law.

At last he has made it possible for at least a few companies to comply with it.

What a commentary on our federal law-making body!

Herbert Fleishhacker, prominent California banker-financier, tells me that sentiment on the Pacific coast is less apprehensive than he found it while visiting New York.

"California has been helped by receiving fairly good prices for its fruits and other products," he declares. "Business is better with us than in many sections. The general disposition is to go ahead regardless of political uncertainties, national and local."

Like almost every other man of affairs, however, he would like to see industry and business given a respite from further unsettling interference.

The Treasury's employment of part of its "profit" created by reducing the gold content of the dollar, for the retirement of $675,000,000 national bank notes, is, on the whole, judicious.

The example set by the utility industry in coming out boldly with appeals to the public, through newspaper advertising and letters to stockholders, is likely to be followed by other business groups when threatened by disaster through political attacks.

Politicians respect public opinion—votes. Hence the new determination of business leaders to appeal directly to public opinion, to voters.

CUBAN SUGAR Production Up

Production of sugar in Cuba since the beginning of this season's grinding totaled 1,224,780 long tons u. to March 1, or 52.9 per cent of the 2,315,000-ton crop expected this year, according to recorders kept in Lamborn & Co., sugar brokers.

On this time last year, production amounted to only 343,166 tons, or 15.2 per cent of the total outturn of 2,274,303 tons.

NRA EXTENSION

Held Up

BY SENATE

Inquiry

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

Judging by the way the Senate Finance Committee is tearing into Donald R. Richberg it will not be long before the death knell of the NRA is sung.

Liberals and conservatives both are dealing out punishment to those who would have the life of General Johnson's once vigorous organization prolonged. Chief obstacle opponents of NRA extension are placing them before those wishing to speed the hearings is a demand that complainants be heard. If they succeed it requires but little imagination to vision the demise of the NRA in some dusty Washington pigeonhole.

Nearly everyone seems to think the application of the gold "profit" to reduce the federal debt is all right. Inflationists say it is fine for their side and conservatives see it as a triumph for sound money. Viewed in that light we are more than certain of our stand of yesterday. In fact, we now lean toward the idea that it doesn't mean anything at all. With the one exception that the government is at last taking steps to simplify the currency. And that is almost academic. Since one of the original intentions of the Federal Reserve was to accomplish just that.

Donald R. Richberg

Notebook: After studying Cram's Reports on the motor industry one certainly reaches the speedy conclusion motor makers are intent on putting the house in order. Compared with 1934, it may be the industry shows up poorly from the statistical angle. But results over a period of time are much better. Comparisons are tricky affairs and should be carefully handled by traders making them for the purpose of guiding market commitments. The steady splatter of new lows is disturbing. Especially as many industrial shares are included.

The stock market is resting at the lowest resistance levels on which bulls have staked their hopes. Though the 99 level on the hourly industrial release leaves little room for anything other than stubborn insistence, things are all right. For our part a five-point decline at least is signalled. Intermittent rallies may appear, but these will only mean a chance to liquidate. We asked for a slide to at least 94-96. Then if a base forms all right, but failure there indicates 92-94.

COTTON

Again Upsets MARKETS

By Associated Press

New York, March 12. Securities and commodities markets were again disturbed by sharp fluctuations in cotton futures today. Although there was evidence of a return to more normal conditions after yesterday's wide open break.

The New York Cotton Exchange was the scene of excited trading from the beginning and alternative periods of strength and weakness kept the market in turmoil throughout the first two hours.

Washington, March 12 (AP)—Senator Russell (D.), Georgia, discussed the cotton situation today with President Roosevelt and then predicted to newsmen that government loans would, in his opinion, "be sufficient to sustain prices."

He said the government had or would authorize loans of 12 cents a pound on from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 bales of cotton.

New York, March 12 (AP)—Cotton was nervous and erratic today after the drastic decline of yesterday.

May contracts, after selling up from 11.06 to 11.25 during the morning, broke to 10.75, but afterwards then tapered off, and while later fluctuations were irregular, prices held fairly steady in the early afternoon, with the market ruling net unchanged to 12 points down.

Governments

In the government section the most activity was in Federal Farm Mortgage 3s, up 2-32nds at 101.12 and Treasury 3⅛s of 1946, unchanged at 103.23.

STOCK Prices Work LOWER

LATE TONE IS HEAVY

New York, March 12—Spasmodic selling gave the stocw market a ragged appearance today. Some prominent issues resisted the downward tendency.

But losses of around a point appeared in Case, du Pont, American Can, Johns Manville and others, and exceptional weakness developed in American Sugar and Owens Illinois, which dropped about 4 and 5 points. The late tone was heavy.

Corporate bonds were heavy, but U. S. governments held fairly well. Cotton fluctuated nervously, and other staples were uncertain. The pound sterling again weakened.

American Sugar and United Fruit dropped around 2 points, and issues getting down a point or so included Union Pacific, U. S. Smelting, Air Reduction, DuPont, Johns-Manville, U. S. Industrial Alcohol, Westinghouse Electric and Western Union. U. S. Steel, American Can, General Motors, Pennsylvania and N. Y. Central declined around a point.

Utility stocks seemed well sold out and President Roosevelt's message to Congress in which he said that the holding company "must go" except where absolutely necessary failed to prompt any immediate further selling in that group.

Wall St. Confused

Wall Street was in a decided confused frame of mind as a result of the slump in cotton and some other leading staples.

There was some inclination among stock traders to veer away from securities of companies likely to suffer inventory losses.

On the other hand, some were inclined to look for early steps in Washington to revive the upward trend of of raw staple prices, in view of the President's recent reiteration of his opinion that he did not yet consider commodity prices were high enough to support the volume of indebtedness.

Attention was returned to the foreign exchange situation by renewed weakness of the pound sterling.

While a number of the cooler heads in Wall Street had decided to regard the slump in sterling as indicating nothing more than a selling flurry, many are now turning to the view that it must begin to show more decisive signs of support soon, if it is not to be concluded that the British authorities have determined upon a program of depreciation.

In the meantime, the gold bloc currencies are being watched closely for signs of breaking under the strain of the sagging pound.

HEAD NOISES
Mrs. Margaret Murphy, 126 Kinnaird St., Cambridge, says: "For 10 months I suffered from Head Noises caused by catarrh of the middle ear. All the time the sounds were like whistles blowing, or escaping steam. I had been treated by local doctors and at the Eye and Ear Infirmary but could get no relief from the distressing noises until I had Dr. Walsh treat me. Now I feel so well that I am glad to make this statement that others who suffer as I did may know where to go for relief."
(Signed) Mrs. Margaret Murphy.

Thirty-Hour Week

Let's Employ Reason

THREE MEN were watching a steam shovel making short work of a big landslide on the highway.

"A wonderful machine," said the first.

"A curse," said the second. "Only three men on that job. If they used picks and shovels there would be work for a hundred men."

"Yes," said the third, "and if they used forks and spoons there would be work for a thousand men."

There are Congressmen seemingly ignorant of the fact that their similar ideas are similarly stupid.

For example, take the bills introduced by Senator Black and Representative Connery to make it a crime punishable by fine or imprisonment or both for an employer to work an employe more than thirty hours in one week, five days in one week, or six hours in one day.

IF an employe works for more than one employer he may not work longer than the hours stipulated.

Agricultural laborers and domestic servants are to be exempt from the proposed form of compulsory part-time idleness or part-time employment at FULL-TIME WAGES.

It is a plan for spreading work, but it could have no other effect than that of spreading unemployment wider than ever.

It would make the depression permanent by legislative enactment.

Business could never get through the landslide of bankruptcy that would be caused by such legislation.

Every business now losing money but carrying on in the hope of recovery would be forced to close down immediately because of the increased losses due to the increased cost of operation.

Businesses now making only a bare profit would be made losing ventures and most of them would close when forced into the red.

THE few, the very few, enterprises able to absorb the additional cost of a thirty-hour week at the prevailing wage rate could not begin to absorb the increased army of the unemployed, an army increased by the means designed for its demobilization.

Destroying food and other forms of wealth and preventing food and other wealth production seemed crazy enough, but at their worst such policies were sanity as compared with a proposal to prevent employers furnishing employment.

Less Privacy Than a Goldfish

After March 15

As March 15 approaches the United States Senate seems bent on giving the kidnapers and other criminals of the country first aid in carrying out their crimes.

The notorious "pink slip" law still stands, the law providing that income tax returns shall be made public. And the Senate, apparently, is determined that it shall continue to stand.

The underworld ought to give the Senate a vote of thanks for this decision.

It will be able henceforth to select its victims without any embarrassing mistakes as to their solvency.

Anyone who makes enough to pay an income tax will be fair game for the snatchers, racketeers and other crooks.

The little taxpayer will be a target for petty exploitation, and the big taxpayers will be a shining mark for organized gangs.

As for "privacy"—obsolete word—your business will be everybody's business.

Your own affairs will be your own no longer.

Any snooper in the land can get a close-up of what you make, or what you don't make.

Irv Cobb's celebrated goldfish will look like a groundhog compared with you.

But the Senate, in its inscrutable wisdom, thus rules, and you will abide by that ruling and like it—unless a miracle prevails at Washington and the pink slip nonsense is repealed.

"Flowers That Bloom"

These Are Indoors

The Spring Flower Show to be held in Boston this year is expected to be the greatest ever.

Sponsored by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, it will continue for an entire week.

It will be worth while journeying out to Mechanics Building to see the gorgeous garden and greenhouse plants to say nothing of the lovely, fragrant flowers.

All the world is drawn to beauty. Why not make it a point to see the finest nature has to offer?

In these rush mad days a trip to the Flower Show should soothe the spirit and quiet the nerves.

Understanding Opera

Massachusetts Helps

Many people fail to attend the operas because they "don't understand them."

This excuse is to be removed through the good offices of the Massachusetts Department of Education.

The University Extension Division is conducting a course in the Boston Public Library to help understanding of operas.

All the operas to be given by the Metropolitan Opera Association in Boston next month are covered in the course.

What do YOU know about "La Traviata," "Lohengrin" and other names often controversially mispronounced?

Taking in this course would help a good many of us who think we don't need it.

"Runaway Autos"

Drivers at Fault

Repeated reports of "runaway autos" may serve the useful purpose of inspiring drivers generally to exercise due care.

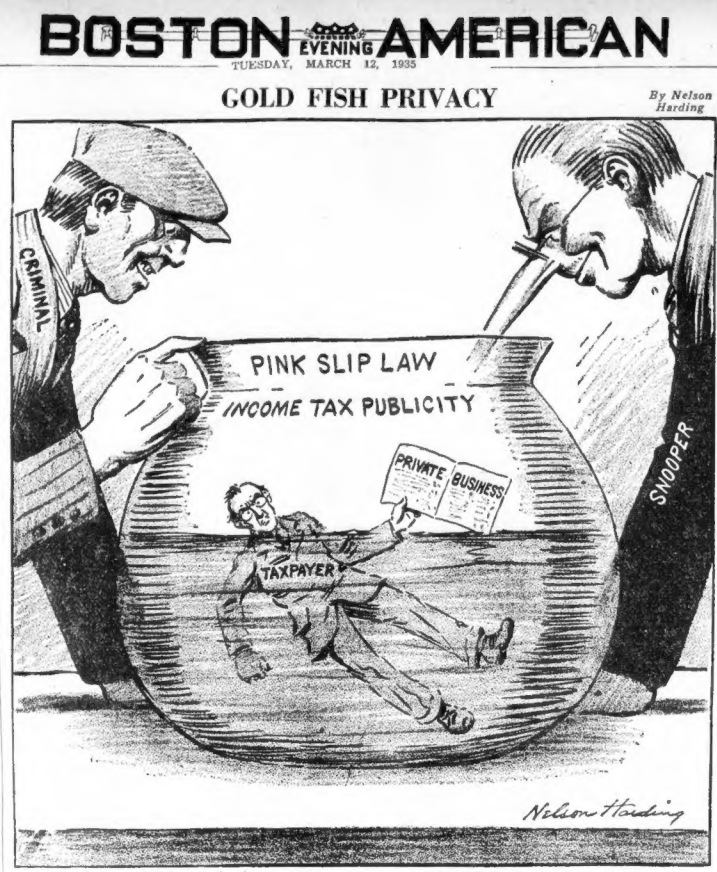
Almost invariably the excuse offered by the careless drivers is that the "brakes were released," but "they don't know how it happened."

Automobiles parked on inclines should have not only the brakes on, but the ignition off and the car in gear with wheels turned toward the curb.

Cars so parked never "mysteriously" menace property or cause injury or death.

GOLD FISH PRIVACY

By Nelson Harding



Like any goldfish in its bowl
The poor taxpayer floats.
The criminal enjoys the scene,
The snooper stares and gloats.

The Pink Slip Law, a bowl of glass,
Gives full publicity.
From busybodies and from crooks
There is no privacy.

Source of Delusion

By Hendrik Van Loon

A barbarian really means a stammerer. For the ancient Greeks, who gave us the word, were very much like ourselves.

We go abroad (not all of us, but, alas, too many), and we come home, and we say that Europe or Asia or South America are all right, if only the people did not insist upon talking their funny gibberish.

The Greeks went even further in their contempt. To them a foreign tongue was not merely so much unintelligible trash, but the people who spoke it actually suffered from an impediment of speech.

They staggered and stumbled through their words—they stammered.

PUGNACIOUS PEOPLE

The Greeks of course were a pugnacious race, forever fighting with all their neighbors and killing off each other when there were no foreign candidates for extermination.

The Chinese on the other hand, as we all of us know, are a peaceable and placid nation who only ask to be let alone, and who accept whatever Fate brings them in a spirit of complete resignation mixed with polite laughter and an occasional pill of opium.

Now we turn to the "Chinese Social and Political Science Review for the Year 1928" and therein read an article by a distinguished Chinese scholar on his ancestors of 20 centuries ago, during the reign of the Emperor Shun (2258 B. C.)

"Obviously," so he writes, "the belief in the inherent superiority of their race over all others was the fundamental basis of the attitude of ancient China towards the outside world."

So that is that, and even the tolerent and broad-minded Chinese, the race that has made it its maxim to "live and let starve," was not above a bit of jingoism.

CAN'T BUILD HOUSES

The aborigines of the Australian mainland are so backward that they have never yet reached the point where they could build themselves a house.

Having never invented any sort of pictorial language of their own, and avoiding (if possible, although with perfectly good reason) all direct contact with the white man, they cannot very well be accused of any familiarity with the word jingoism.

A strange word, by the way. Benjamin Disraeli bestowed it upon us.

In the year 1878, when it looked as if the Russians were going to push the Turks out of Europe, Disraeli was all for sending the British fleet to the Black Sea to save his Turkish friends from annihilation.

In those days the music halls of Great Britain were still the barometer of popular feeling. And the populace was all for the Turks and all against the Russians.

Hence the enormous popularity of an artist who sang a noisy patriotic song which, having explained England's peaceful intentions, warned the Russian Bear that, while England did not intend to fight, "By Jingo, if we do, we've got the men, we've got the ships, we've got the money too!"

But the native Australian, safely hidden in the bush behind the Blue Mountains, was blissfully ignorant both about Mr. Disraeli and Mr. Jingo.

And yet all early explorers agree upon one point: that these naked savages who could hardly count to six (the Tasmanians let it go at three) were convinced that they were the only civilized people in the world, and that the rest of the world was so much trash!

One could devote an entire library to this cheerful subject. Racial arrogance is as widespread as the human race itself.

This won't make it any the easier for all the victims all over the world who are suffering just now for having been born in the wrong cradle.

But it may give them some consolation to reflect that they are martyrs of the oldest of all human delusions, martyrs of the hallucination of racial superiority.

Stars and Stripes

"Police Act to Halt Holdups"—Headline. But aren't tax collectors exempted?

Peabody's ERA dancing class seems to disprove the old saying that those who dance must pay the piper.

Maybe they'll eventually try to stop rural foggies from racing at Uncle Sam's mail carriers.

State study reveals we have auto accidents at all hours of the day and night. Was study needed to find that out?

It is said that only one in 100,000,000 persons understands the Einstein theory, and that's one more than understands the theories of some of our congressional astronomers.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McIntyre

O. O. McIntyre

New York, March 12—E. W. Howe, the grand old man of letters, nearing 81, is to undergo an operation for slightly cataracted eyes in Baltimore this Spring and will then return to his typewriter with the usual vigor. His friend H. L. Mencken has convinced him he will actually have a good time in the hospital.

Mr. Howe's winters are spent in Miami, where in his milk-white suit and flowing black bow tie he is a figure at all important events. He lunches frequently with George Ade, John T. McCutcheon and H. T. Webster and is often a spectator at the races. He is startlingly remindful of K. C. B. in looks.

Friends and admirers are trying to persuade him to revive his Ed Howe Weekly, a frisky journal of "information and indignation," which he published just for the fun of it from his home in Atchison, Kan. But he is not so certain he cares to assume the responsibilities again.

He says that in octogenarian years he has become more convinced than ever that most men talk too much. Long ago, he mastered brevity in writing and he now hopes even to improve along that line. There are likely a dozen magazines ready to accept anything he writes. But he's coy.

A. C. Blumenthal continues to be the official guide for all the visiting beauties of the Hollywood screen and the European stage. The first night in town they are almost certain to be down front at a first night and afterward caviaring at a ringside table of a class supper club with "Blumey."

He puts his block-long Rolls, with uniformed footman, at their disposal, supplies them generously with orchids and otherwise proves the most generous courtier the town has ever known.

Manhattan's most congested cafe block is Fifty-Second street between Fifth and Sixth avenues. Once a row of somber homes, it's almost solid with gaudily decorated drinking dens. They range from the ribald tunery of Leon and Eddie's to the forbiddding-iron-fenced exclusiveness of "No. 21."

The curbs are lined with every variety of automobile from imported limousine to gyp taxi. It is to this block that Tallulah Bankhead goes for an after-theater bite. As well as debutantes having their fling. Also the Heywood Broun crowd, the collegians down from New Haven and Huey Long when he's in town.

The most suspicious haven for college "cuties" in the town ever knew was Bustanoby's on West 39th street, with its red plush, mirrors and lump gilt.

It was madly harum-scarum. Sidney Romberg, now a famous composer, was the painfully thin pianist. Upstairs lived Earl Carroll, acquiring his now habitual pallor, writing songs. Also Grant Clarke, the lyrist.

Everything expressed the blatant French of Maxim's—even to the Gabrielles, Lucettes and Fifis who checked hats and the prop cocottes in sweeping black velvet hats. The starter was Papa Jean, a ringer for Clemenceau with the glazed cockaded hat of the red-wheeled fiacre cocher.

Around the corner on 40th street was—and still is—another French cafe, the Beaux Arts. It was here that Texas Guinan first cried her "Hello Sucker!" salute. And where Lillian Lorraine once acted as hostess.

It was, I believe, the first restaurant in New York to serve boiled black snails in shells swimming with garlic sauce in the manner of l'Escargot in Paree.

Then there was Murray's on West 42d street with genial Pat Kyne, a cousin of Peter E.—and where is he? It introduced the revolving dance floor revived in so many estaminets this season.

Two of Murray's Pink Dream cocktails, an unholy and viscous blend of Bacardi and cointreau, and a twirl on the terpechorean merry-go-round and everybody let down their hair and cracked into the dizzy waltz.

Low Cody lived in the bachelor apartments, with cream corduroy furnishings, upstairs. So did Duncan Mansfield, John Mason, Kyre Bellew and Jimmy Hussey.

East End avenue by the river has become a residential highway for the musical. It's celebrity range includes not only the operatic star, Lawrence Tibbett, but the crooner, Rudy Vallee, and the torch chanteuse, Helen Morgan.

The street has been the locale of several of Vincent Astor's de luxe apartment house experiments. Once slummy, it has grown uppity. Just the other twilight I saw a stiff-elbowed English butler airing a fuzzy kiyoodle.

A dowager voice from a brick garden called out a dandy caption for a Peter Arno cartoon: "Come Grannin, don't let Eloise catch the night chill."

Riches in Green Goods

Human Side of the News

By Edwin C. Hill

THE GLOBE TROTTER OF HEARST METROTONE NEWS

My idea of something to skip in reading matter has always been the bean and onion quotations.

Edwin C. Hill

But a recent chance adventure in night errantry, so to speak, led me into a lurid midnight drama, lit with flares and bonfires, paced to clamor and tumult against the cyclorama of a winter night, with fat phlegmatic vegetables strutting leading roles in the cast.

Allow me to introduce the D'Artagnans of the seed catalogue to the Human Side of the News. Step right down in front, Mr. Onion!

Along about 2 o'clock in the morning, preferably on a winter night, you turn in New York into Washington street at Park place. Nearby is the Central Receiving market, which nightly clears the produce which feeds the 10,000,000 persons of the metropolitan area of New York.

FANTASTIC STAGE

Metal drums with tops and bottoms knocked out, holes plugged in for draught, filled with blazing packing crates, are the footlights of a stage as fantastic as anything ever conceived by Jean Cocteau.

A multitude of bulky, fur-clad figures, grotesque in the flaring light, is milling through the mountains of produce, crated and in the open.

But the lines pass single file. There is room for only one man at a time between the cliffs of green goods which plethoric America nightly heaves into the metropolis.

Staid old Victorian brick buildings seem cock-eyed and awry, shocked and astounded with all this unseemly midnight pother as auctioneers bark, buyers wrangle, a bit of horse play sets up a road in the crowd, or a flying wedge of Italian buyers pipes up something from Verdi.

RELAYING CRATES

A line of handlers, relaying crates, makes a black frieze for an instant which melts into a flow of easy, flexed motion.

They need their breath, they measure their strength; they achieve an easy, fascinating rhythmic economy of motion.

But after hours there's many a roaring bout of the "air-right," the "comb and the line," the "long roll" and "snake eyes" while New York sleeps.

Today about 75 or 80 per cent of this big midnight market mob is of immigrant stock with push-cart beginnings.

The saloons faded—there are not many of them in there now—but little restaurants and beaneries filled the street. It is a cold night, maybe a blizzard, with business as usual.

Every once in a while the dealer wants a cup of coffee to buck him up. That nearly always means also a big platter of food.

The average wholesaler will eat five or six times in a night. He gets fat. The lean Americans pass and the fat entrepreneurs survive.

But still there is a small but vigorous representation of home talent. They battle the other crowd, and there are Homeric dollar tourneys between them.

One of the most alert and aggressive is a shrewd dealer of Irish-American stock, descendant of one of the old Hudson River families, in the business for generations.

CLEANS UP $500,000

Two months ago his Florida representative phoned him that a frost was starting which would kill the tomatoes. He hopped the next plane to Cuba and bought up every loose tomato in the island.

On a following plane came his bitterest rival, a shrewd pushcart alumnus, rarely missing a bet, but just one jump behind this time. The Irish-American dealer cleaned up just $500,000 on the aeroplane dash.

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

BLAME YOURSELF FIRST

A SUCCESSFUL business man once said to me—

"I have made it a rule of my life to blame myself first when anything with which I am connected goes wrong.

"For example," said he, "take the offended customers with which every firm must deal. It's easy to fix the responsibility for that on some poor clerk, but I waste time and strength if I go on blaming clerks.

Elsie Robinson

"IT'S MY BUSINESS TO HIRE CLERKS WHO WON'T OFFEND CUSTOMERS AND TO KEEP THEIR CONDUCT UP TO STANDARD.

"And so it goes all along the line. No matter what happens, it's really up to me and I might as well recognize that to begin with."

GRAND PHILOSOPHY

BLAME YOURSELF FIRST! That's a good philosophy for any human. And you'll not get very far in life until you adopt it.

Barring the acts of God, you and you alone are responsible for the things that happen in your life.

You're responsible if your husband is rude to you—

Or your children vass you—

Or the neighbors impose upon you—

Or the trade folk cheat you—

Or the world at large does you dirt.

You may not be able to change the character of husbands, children, neighbors, tradefolk, or the world at large—

THE LOOSE ENDS

But you can control their attitude towards you—

AND THE SERVICE THEY RENDER YOU.

You can tighten up the loose ends in your own character which give people the opportunity to undo you.

The loose ends of laziness, fuzzy thinking, self-pity, cowardice, conceit, sentimentality and peevishness.

These are the things that really undo and betray you—not your fellow men.

Your husband's rudeness, your neighbor's malice, your children's impudence, do not begin in husbands, neighbors or children.

They begin in you—

IN THE WEAK PLACES OF YOUR OWN NATURE.

DON'T WASTE TIME COMPLAINING ABOUT WHAT OTHER PEOPLE DO TO YOU—

GET BUSY AND MAKE IT IMPOSSIBLE FOR THEM TO DO SUCH THINGS TO YOU!

BLAME YOURSELF FIRST! YOURS THE RESPONSIBLE PARTY!

Education Comes First

By JAMES T. WILLIAMS, JR.

Upon the subject of education . . . I can only say that I view it as the most important subject which we as a people can be engaged in.—Abraham Lincoln.

It was on March 15, 1832, that Mr. Lincoln spoke these words to the people of Sangamon County in the State of Illinois.

He was speaking not only for himself but for Washington and Jefferson, for the Adamses, Madison and Monroe and for Andrew Jackson, all of whom shared his passionate devotion for the cause of public education.

One hundred and three years later public education is in jeopardy all over the United States.

State after state, due to the emergency created by the depression or to the extravagance and waste arising from an obsolete system of county and local government, is failing to provide "for every child within its borders the full measure of education which his need and his capacity demand."

WHAT SURVEY SHOWS

A partial survey recently made by the Federal Office of Education reveals the urgent need of new school building construction in twenty-four states and in more than one thousand cities of twenty-five hundred population and over.

This survey shows that public building construction dropped 73 per cent from 1930 to 1933.

Conditions caused by the depression and the large number of boys and girls between 14 and 18 years of age who have been thrown back on the schools as a result of the prohibition of child labor make the need for new public school buildings more imperative than ever.

It is estimated by the Federal Office of Education that in at least 24 states today public schools lack the buildings, the equipment and the funds to provide schooling for 2,500,000 children between 14 and 18 years of age who are unable to find work and are unable to get into a public school.

These states which are failing so far behind in meeting the demand for public school facilities are the ones that would first benefit by a Federal school building program, if only the Congress will give the President the authority and the funds for this purpose.

AN AMERICAN CAUSE

A $600,000,000 school building program financed by the federal government and carried out under its supervision would meet the immediate need for school building construction in a majority of the states of the Union.

It would provide school facilities for several millions boys and girls who are out of work and out of school; it would give employment to 300,000 workers in the building trades.

If President Roosevelt will give priority to new public school building construction under his proposed public works program public sentiment will not be slow to compelling the Congress to support his leadership in this direction.

Public education is an American cause close to the heart of the great American family. In going to the support of the public education the President and the Congress will be going to the defense of the household of the nation.

Text For Today "If thou faint in the day of adversity thy strength is small."—Proverbs xxiv, 10. Suggested by the Rev. Arthur T. Brooks, Dudley Street Church, Boston.
